Röyksopp's Torbjorn Brundtland and Svein Berge grew up together in Tromso in northern Norway and launched the band a few years ago when they reunited in the coastal, university city of Bergen. Though their music has already been lumped into the newly hip "chill-out" genre, the overall catchiness of Melody A.M. far surpasses most other recent albums in that category. Combining the mellow, melodic pop sensibility of Air with the hook-laden danceability of Underworld—while sidestepping the emotional intensity of Sigur Rós—Brundtland and Berge have forged a wholly new chill-out sound.

Röyksopp's U.S. tour rolls into the Paradise Rock Club March 16. Promising "front-and-center guitars, vocals, off-the-hook drums, smashed keyboards, blessed-out melodies, plus a bedazzling light and video show," the Röyksopp live show should attract clubgoers and indie-rockers alike.

The Paradise Rock Club, 969 Commonwealth Ave., (617-562-8800). March 16, 7pm. $13. 18+ —Daniel Spurling

The Girl Next Door, 38

She's the girl you wish lived next door--beautiful, kind, intelligent, and warm, with a contagious smile, lovely countenance and infectious sense of humor. She is passionate about her family, friends, music (she has a melodious singing voice and a penchant for piano lounges and the Pops), entertaining and cooking (Italian cuisine or a backyard barbecue), and staying healthy (working out, rollerblading, and tennis). Her eclectic tastes also include traveling (weekend getaways to the Berkshires, Nantucket, and New York), dining out, and theater. If you are 38-44, active, athletic, smart, kind, funny, ambitious, and love and want children, please call me, Suzanne at 617-492-1200, FAX 617-424-1941, or email me at Suzanne@Gentlepeopleltd. com. (If you are handy around the house, all the better!).

Improper Impersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity). Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

To Luke
You're the punk from South Boston who had a fling with my wife last year. You were nothing more than a mere distraction. You happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. I found the e-mails you sent, and I think you're a worthless scumbag. I can understand why you can't find your own woman. My only solace is knowing that when it happens to you (and it will), the other guy will be a better offer and you won't stand a chance, unlike me. Your 15 seconds of fame is up, and the only part of you that's funny is your looks, Fire Marshall Bill. The joke's on you.
—The Better Man

Joanne on the Valentine Pub Crawl
I was hoping to talk some more and get your number when we reached the Place, but it seems you never made it. I was having a great time and was looking forward to seeing you there. I'd like to talk some more and see about redeeming your lottery ticket. Write me back and let me know what you won so I know it's you, and we can take it from there.

Soccer Fan
We made eye contact a couple of times at the Canton Sportsplex Feb. 4 (the 9pm game). You: A goalie on the yellow team who just got back from a trip to Africa. Me: brown curly-haired friend of the blue team playing on the opposite field. If you're reading this, I'd love to hear about your trip over coffee.

Sledding at Jamaica Pond
I met you sledding with your "little sister" at Jamaica Pond Feb. 8. You asked to have your picture taken and then to borrow my sled, and we talked for a couple minutes, but we both had to leave before I had the guts to ask for your phone number. I'm kicking myself and hoping to hear back.

Alzheimer's Benefit
Feb. 1 at the International: You were very smartly dressed in black pants and top, had long blond hair, a strong spirit and a delightful smile. I was wearing a reddish-orange silk shirt, black pants, cowboy boots, black jacket (for awhile) and am about 5'5". For most of the evening, we circled each other, you spending time with your lady friends and me hanging with my buddy. I spent a good part of the night looking for an opportunity to talk with you and I believe you smiled my way a few times. Then we were both downstairs, with the music pounding and me thinking of asking you to dance, but you were chatting with two guys. I'd very much like to talk and go dancing!

Syrah Sluggin' Maryland Girl
You were at Johnny D's Feb. 4. Obviously you weren't comfortable with what you were doing at dinner, yet you were still stunningly attractive. You are from Maryland, born July 17, 1978, and you waited in line for three hours for that ID—obviously, I was your waiter. I tried to calm the seriousness of your conversation with Montana Man (so did you, with three glasses of syrah), but to no avail. You breathed a sigh of relief as you were leaving and flashed a brief smile my way. Maybe someone cute was standing behind me? I didn't care to look, as I liked the idea that you directed it at me. Since seeing that gorgeous smile, I've wanted nothing more than the chance to make you smile again. If I am wrong and you weren't breaking up with him, I am truly sorry. If my hunch was right and you feel like smiling, I hope you take a chance and e-mail me.

Rich from Belmont
That was dumb of me not to take your number on Saturday night at Emily's, when there was this terrible shortage of people who were both good looking and had anything interesting to say. Please do send your number, because who knows?

Third Time's a Charm
I was browsing the aisles of the Hollywood Video Boylston Street around 4pm on Feb. 2 when I noticed you doing the same. I avoided making direct eye contact, even though I thought you glanced my way a few times. I lingered for a while, but you soon left, and I figured so too did my chance. To my surprise and delight, a few minutes later I stumbled upon you in the milk aisle of the Trader Joe's next door. This time we met up in the check-out line, but I was too shy to say anything. You let me go ahead of you, your deep voice ever so polite. You: about 5'10", looking dapper in a tan top-coat and plaid scarf, and resembling Freddie Prinze Jr. with your short black hair and glasses. Me: 5'4", with long brown hair in a braided ponytail, wearing an Irish cap and glasses. If you don't want to watch your next rental alone, drop me a line.
—hartka4@hotmail.com

Mr. Congeniality
You: guy in dark L.L. Bean jacket, taking the T from Arlington to Copley with your friend Caroline and one big chip on your shoulder. I was the lady standing by the door, and contrary to your comment as you got off the T, I can and do think. In fact, here's a thought for you: If you find the idea of a packed T car at rush hour so "unbelievable," why not walk the one measly stop? The cool air might calm you down, and it would spare the rest of us your atrocious T etiquette.
—T'd Off

Guitar Man
It was Feb. 7, a snowy Friday afternoon. We were on the Green Line. You were carrying a guitar case; I was wearing the Red Sox hat. I was eyeing you and thought I saw you glance my way as well. If you did and are single, send me a message. I would love to hear from you.
—sox_fan26@hotmail.com

Happy Valentine's Day!
You self-righteous bitch! Thanks for dumping me right before Valentine's Day and my birthday. Don't give me that "You are absolutely the nicest guy I have eve met" crap! What the hell else does a guy have to do to keep your heart? "Oh, it just isn't there for me anymore." What, would you like me to cheat on you like your ex-boyfriend did and have you come back to me too? Sorry, I don't operate that way. Then you have th nerve laugh at me on the telephone when we try to talk things over. Bullshit you weren't laughing at me. You know who you are!
—Vday_massacre@yahoo.com

Please Don't Leave
What do I need to do to keep you in my life? You are such a special person to me. From the moment we first met on our blind date I felt tha connection. Six months have now passed and I still get that that initial sensation when I hear your voice or see your face. Sure, at times it hasn't been the most romantic relationship, but you hav continuously said that you don't lil that "kind of crap." I know times are stressful and tough for you rigl now, but I want to be there for you and help you through it. Please don't walk away from a constant i your life. I know the good times ca continue and evolve into somethin more. I love you.

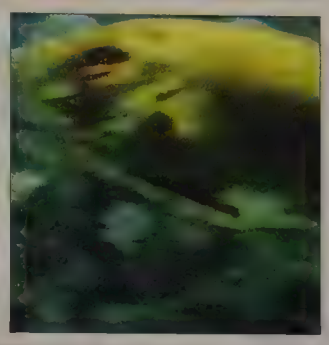
MARCH 5 – 18, 2003

BY ROCKIE GARDINER



PISCES FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Fish born near the Aquarius cusp may sense the tension building as disruptive Uranus prepares to enter Pisces next week. Expect at least one radical change in your personal life as you develop a greater appreciation of independent action and spontaneity. Happy birthday; this could be the best present you'll get in years. And then again, if you're enjoying a fairly placid scene, drifting along on predictable tides of change, making art and love, then the sudden shock of the new could really throw you for a loop.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

No matter if it's sudden or gradual, even a small change in your priorities can produce dramatic results. As your Mars ruler settles into Capricorn—the practical earth sign in which it works amazingly well—you become convinced that you're capable of accomplishing much more. You may even morph into the epitome of efficiency, dedicated to seeing things through to completion before taking on another project. Who is this creature and how long will it be around? Until Easter for sure, maybe the entire Year of the Ram.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

An assortment of acquaintances may already be egging you on, making suggestions about the direction your career should be taking, if only you heed their advice. Advice is what you usually get when so many planets, and your Venus ruler, are in Aquarius, an idea-driven air sign that would rather not get involved. If you want emotional or artistic support, look to a water sign; for practical, bankable assistance, an earth sign. Right now, Capricorn is your best bet, especially for money problems. Romance? Ask an Aries.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

It's that time of year again, the problematic Pisces period, when people who are in a position to pressure you tend to lay it on thicker than ever. By now you should know how to field their questions, ignore the subtle hints and divert the boss's or your family's gaze to something that really needs fixing. All this can be accomplished artfully, without resentment or recrimination until the grateful Ides of March. Then stern Saturn in your sign steps in to test your definition of stability and responsible behavior.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

The Pisces new moon this week marks the beginning of the end of the zodiacal cycle that started with the Aries new moon last April. Congratulations, you're almost finished with the major issues your latest trip around the cosmic circle has brought to a head. Try to make time during the next four weeks to bring whatever is still outstanding to something that resembles closure. Although adorable Venus is leaving your Capricorn marriage house, passionate Mars is checking in for the first time in two years.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Isn't it about time your social life picked up, at least while Venus is in Aquarius, the sign of your cosmic soul mate? An office romance is always a possibility when magnetic Venus is hanging around the water cooler. But the goddess can also fan a desire to check out new places and do things with people you're not particularly close to. Curiosity, when it belongs to a Lion, won't kill the cat. You shouldn't encounter a problem until the middle of the month, and then only if you let an obsession get out of hand.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

During Pisces even a confirmed bachelor can be drawn into the divisive "me/we" dichotomy. It can't be helped; while the sun travels through your marriage house, the creative energy of the cosmos points to what you can do, who you become when you interact with a partner. Like Gemini (end of the school year) and Sagittarius (the holidays), Pisces often turns into a period of adjustment. For mutable signs like yours—who tend to react to events, rather than plan for change—the next three weeks can be memorable.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Taking care of business, one itty-bitty detail after another, could turn out to be your latest major accomplishment. Wrapping up loose ends before the astrological year ends may not seem such a big deal. Yet somehow you are inspired (when your sociable Venus ruler meets visionary Neptune) to come up with a novel method of fulfilling an obligation. How this turns into street theater or entertainment is beyond me, but think along those lines and you might have a hit on your hands.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

A preponderance of planets at the bottom of your chart locks you into matters dealing with your past and present home life and the extended family. Domestic bliss remains an ideal worth aiming for, especially if aesthetic standards are maintained and you're enjoying a social life. Plus, there has to be a spiritual or psychic influence at work or you won't feel connected. A choice between love and money may be a problem when the sun squares your Pluto co-ruler next week. Not particularly pleasant, but quite revealing.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

During a mutable sun sign, such as Sagittarius or Pisces, opportunities for significant change seem to pop up with frequency, alacrity and no apparent reason. Fate's fickle finger likes to mess with Archers when you're poised on the edge, ready to jump off one bandwagon, on to the next cause. As the Pisces sun tweaks your natal planets and the tension builds, know that even if you flail around a bit, you'll land on your feet and make whatever adjustments are necessary. So what if you spend big bucks in the process.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Impulse buying is usually not your thing—you tend to research a purchase until you're sure you'll get the best deal. However, while a slew of planets pass through your Aquarius money house, the temptation to reach for the latest electronic marvel can be irresistible, just so you know. You're also in executive suite space, willing to take on more responsibility, issue orders and have them executed without hesitation. While militant Mars in your sign may make you slightly scary, it can also make you much sexier.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Bending the rules, breaking the mold, twisting your ankle—all possibilities as impulsive Mars and interactive Mercury zero in on your Uranus ruler. These are the last days (for a while) to relish the independence that freedom-loving Uranus has bestowed on you while it transited Aquarius. On March 10, your ruling planet crosses over to Pisces and sticks a toe in deep emotional waters until September. Then it returns to remind you how good you've had it. Why are you already spending like a drunken sailor?

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

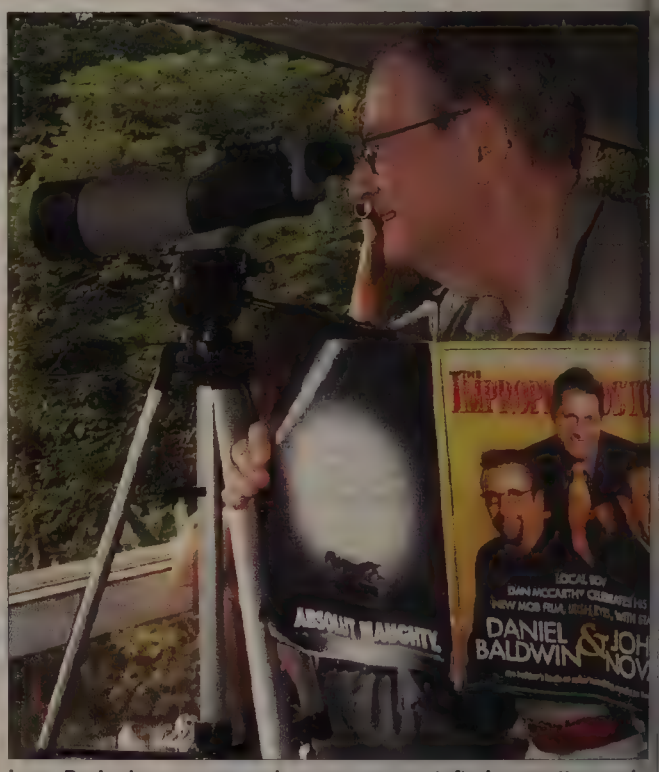
Newly elected members of Congress from Georgia Denise Majette, Jim Marshall and David Scott are waiting for us to launch THE IMPROPER HOT-LANTAN.

Aimee Sebastian and Robin Watlington are poised to spot celebrities at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel in Beverly Hills, Calif. Eventually they saw Corey Feldman valet someone.

Alison Guilmette and Linda McKenna represent for Boston at Hollywood's Walk of Fame with Joe Thornton and THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN. We don't understand what that guy from Becker has to do with Boston, though.

Dan Coffey checks out Checkpoint Charlie in Berlin. Just behind him, in the former Communist East Berlin, are a McDonald's, a J. Crew, a Ford dealership, and a guy selling Soviet weapons-grade uranium.

Jessica Stitt and Don Dalton prepare to parasail in the Turks and Caicos Islands in the Caribbean. Parasailing gets boring after five minutes, so it's good they took some reading material.



Larry Berk observes green honeycreepers, tufted coquettes and violaceous euphonias in Trinidad, British West Indies. We're pretty sure them's fancy names fer trees or rocks or sumpin'.

IMPROPER BOUNTY

BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER:
Taking top prize in the Ugly Truck and Dog Contest, held in late March at the Caribou Carnival and Canadian Championship Dog Derby in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories.

Send color or b&w prints (min. 3x5) to: Improper Sightings, The Improper Bostonian Magazine, 142 Berkeley St., 3rd floor, Boston, MA 02116, or e-mail high-resolution photos to: sightings@improper.com. Please include your name, address, phone number, e-mail and photo location. All photos become the property of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE and will not be returned.

Last Scene Here BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the We Take Your Health to Heart party, clockwise from upper left: Chaka Khan performing; Byron Thomas and Brian Lighty; Sidney Punter, Aisha Saunders and Kirk Jackson; Bernie and Carol Fulp; Bmaynard Scarborough; Wayne Budd; Karen Holmes Ward; Karen and Ron Walker.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO RUFUS?

When it comes to singing divas, we'd gladly trade a lifetime of Madonna, Mariah and Whitney for one night with Chaka Khan, which is why her performance at the 17th annual We Take Your Health to Heart gala for the RoxComp Neighborhood Health Center made for such a superlative evening.

Held amid the rococo splendor of the Copley Plaza Hotel, the party began with a VIP dinner and reception and continued with more cocktails and a killer one-hour concert in the ballroom, and it attracted the crème de la crème of Boston's black society, as well as some white folks who know how to have a good time when they're invited to one. Guests included philanthropic fun couples Wayne and Jacqui Budd, Kathy and Richard Taylor, and Carol and Bernie Fulp; the dapper Bud (Monroe) Moseley; the equally dapper Ron Walker and his gorgeous other half, Karen; RoxComp's stunning CEO, Anita Crawford; Putnam Investments adonis Brian Lighty; his understudy for the evening, Byron Thomas; white-hot interior designer Eric Roseff; blue-blooded do-gooder Rhys Gardiner; Museum of Fine Arts diversity guru Sidney Punter; statuesque broadcasting babe Karen Holmes Ward; the Boston Globe's Aisha Saunders and her man, attorney Kirk P. Jackson, plus Saunders' incorrigible colleague, Bmaynard Scarborough.

Chaka rocked, as she's wont to do, and anyone who didn't thoroughly enjoy the whole evening doesn't know sheep-dip from apple-butter.

THANK HEAVEN FOR ELASTIC WAISTBANDS...

When faced with adversity, some people resign themselves to it, while others do something about it, which is what restaurateur Carla Gomes, owner of the popular North End eatery Terramia, did.

Her son, David, has suffered from diabetes since he was an infant, so Gomes decided to organize and host City Feast—Dining for a Cure, a five-course wine dinner to raise money for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. In addition to her own restaurant, the indefatigable Gomes persuaded such competitors as Artu, Bricco, Lucca, Prezza and Sage to host tables, and then wrangled a special guest star from the Bruins: defenseman Nick Boynton (who was diagnosed with diabetes his rookie year in the NHL).

Carla Gomes, Nick Boynton and Joe Tinnirello at City Feast—Dining for a Cure.

Guests—among them such bon vivants as British playboy Mark Slater and his stunning fiancée, Julie; Caffe Vittoria owner David Riccio; and the John Cookes of Wellesley—were treated to a feast worthy of Henry VIII, while Gomes and Boynton table-hopped at all the restaurants, greeting and thanking everyone without ever getting to sit down and eat (which was a damn shame, since everything we were served was outstanding).

The first of what's bound to become a hugely popular annual event, the evening raised over $21,000 and left everyone feeling fat and happy. As one attendee put it, "I'm just glad I wore my eating pants."

LOVE STINKS...

So this, then, is the state of romance in Boston:

Saucy-young-things-about-town Diane Danielson and Rachel Power sent out an e-mail inviting friends and acquaintances to a Bridget Jones–inspired Just Say No to Valentine's Day/Singletons' Party on February 12 at the Federalist. Smug marrieds (as long as they had the proper attitude) were welcome, and the evening was expected to be a low-key, wine-and-a-few-nibblies affair that started at 7:30 and ended in time for everyone to make it into the office bright eyed and bushy tailed the next morning.

Instead, the place was mobbed by 6pm and by last call, the party was still going gangbusters.

To protect the not-so-innocent, we won't name names, but the crowd was a 60-40 mix of women and men, and it ran the gamut from a couple who met at the party and began furiously making out at the end of the bar, to a squadron of women gorging themselves at the buffet while comparing breast size and bitching about the dearth of desirable men, to a group of investment banker types pretending they had no idea what was going on. Business cards flew fast and furious, phone numbers were exchanged, and choice comments overheard during the course of the evening included:

"Valentine's Day is strictly a couples' event. What's a single person supposed to do—go out for dinner alone and then rent a porno movie?"

And, "I've got to get married. Then maybe I could find a date."

The following exchange took place between two men at the bar:

"I have to give him her business card. She hasn't dated in five years."

"Is she good-looking?"

"Well...she hasn't dated in five years."

Meanwhile, here's how the evening progressed for one group of five young lovelies: By midnight, the two single girls were still cracking wise at the bar, while their engaged friend went home to phone her fiancé, another went off to find her boy friend, and the married one left to have sex with someone other than her husband. iB

SHAME ON PAUL PIERCE FOR NOT KNOWING THE MEANING OF THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS' "ROCK CHALK" CHANT.

—EMILY VENANZI
BROOKLINE (FORMERLY OF OVERLAND PARK, KANSAS)

CHALK OF THE TOWN

Shame on Paul Pierce for not knowing the meaning of the University of Kansas' "Rock Chalk" chant (Soroff/On, March 5)! As a proud native Kansan and lifelong Jayhawk fan, I am compelled to explain its origin. "Ray, rah, Jayhawk, KU" was the original yell, conceived by chemistry professor E.S. Bailey in 1886 as a cheer for the Science Club. An English professor soon suggested replacing "ray, rah" with "rock, chalk," which refers to the chalky limestone found on the hill on which the university is built. This version of the chant gained popularity, and has been the official school yell since 1887.

—EMILY VENANZI

YANKEE FOOTWEAR

In the March 5 issue Carolyn Faye Fox questioned whether Yankee Magazine readers would "kick up their sensibly shod heels" in reaction to news of Todd English, who was profiled in the March issue of Yankee.

While some Yankee readers steer clear of spike heels, don't let that fool you into thinking they lack sophisticated tastes. Our 2 million readers are serious about good food, know the work of fine chefs, enjoy signature recipes shared on YankeeMagazine.com and have a keen interest in the people shaping Boston's culinary scene.

Yankee's May issue will feature a walking tour with Oleana's Ana Sortun of her favorite places to find authentic ingredients and enjoy fine dining in Boston. We encourage comfortable footwear. Ana covers a lot of ground.

President, Yankee Magazine

EDITOR'S NOTE

SUPERIOR INTERIORS

"The easiest way to change a room is by changing the color of it." So says interior designer Michael Valvo, who had a hand in redesigning the apartment featured on page 26 of this, our annual Interiors issue. As I gaze out my office door at the freshly painted (and I mean fresh—the crew left an hour ago) Tricycle red wall meeting a Marlboro blue one, where this morning there was nothing but white, I've a new appreciation for that statement.

The Interiors issue and the coming of spring (will saying it every issue make it reality?) were dual inspirations for the IMPROPER's office redecoration, and just as in our apartment makeover story, a little paint has helped create a whole new look.

If aesthetic improvements to your living space have been on your to-do list, but you've been reluctant to outlay the cash, take a look at what two design teams accomplished on a limited budget in a tiny North End apartment. Before and after photos of the space, practical advice from the designers on small changes that can make a big impact and product information will help motivate you to get the redesign ball rolling.

In another take on the design theme, our feature "Delicious Designs" (page 16) provides inspiration to get out of your apartment and into some of Boston's most visually exciting new public spaces. We took talented interiors photographer Greg Premru inside five of the city's most interesting new restaurants (one of them not even open yet) and interviewed owners and their designers to show you how these establishments have married food and atmosphere in happy harmony.

Finally, in honor of the last day of this issue's life—and in keeping with IMPROPER tradition—we've planted a few April Fools' jokes in these pages. See if you can spot the three false calendar entries and one entire column of make-believe.

CONTRIBUTOR

GREG PREMRU

Haling from New England and educated here in Boston at the Art Institute, photographer Greg Premru specializes in shooting interiors and architecture for architects and designers, as well as advertising agencies and publications. His images can be seen in publications such as Architecture, Metropolitan Home and This Old House. The beautifully lit color images that make up his commercial work evoke the spaces from which they are created. In contrast, his latest personal project is a study of architectural details in black-and-white that draws its power from the graphic and monumental nature of the subject.

While his self-portrait technique (see above) might need a little tweaking, you can see his interiors work in "Delicious Designs" on page 16, or online at www.gregpremru.com.

NEW IN TOWN

Berry Fine

If we told you that chef Ming Tsai's right-hand man—his executive sous chef responsible for Blue Ginger's kitchen plus recipe testing for Tsai's books and his Food Network show—had ventured out on his own and was cooking at a new restaurant in Cambridge, how fast would you make a reservation? Faster than you can say "Bam."

Said chef Tom Berry's new haunt, Bambara, serves up a contemporary take on American brasserie cuisine. Located adjacent to the new Hotel Marlowe and down the block from the CambridgeSide Galleria, Bambara (not to be confused with Bomboa) offers Berry a chance "to return to my culinary roots, where the emphasis was on American cuisine," he says. Look forward to such delicacies as clam rolls on grilled brioche and Maine crabcake salad when Bambara opens March 21. 25 Edwin Land Blvd., Cambridge (617-868-4444). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Short

INTERVIEW

Kelly %$#@-ing Osbourne

Say the words "pop princess" to Kelly Osbourne and she'll cringe. It should come as no big surprise. She is, after all, the daughter of the Prince of Darkness. The 18-year-old star of MTV's The Osbournes has captured America's attention, if not its heart, with her brash style, censor-inducing mouth and don't-give-a-f--- attitude. Her debut album, Shut Up, for which she wrote all the songs but one, was released in November. The British spitfire took a few minutes to chat with us before she set out on her first national tour, which lands at Axis March 29.

IB: Who are the biggest influences on your music?
KO: I would say Joan Jett, Pat Benatar, Debbie Harry. And T. Rex. For newer music, I love Jimmy Eat World.
IB: What would your dream tour be?
KO: I don't know. It's a hard question because the music I like isn't necessarily the music my fans like. If I had to say someone I'd say Justin Timberlake because he's a rad guy and a friend of mine.
IB: How about your nightmare tour?
KO: Britney Spears. I couldn't handle that. I've hung out with her. She's very nice, but I just don't like her music. It's just not my thing, you know. But she's really cool.
IB: Have you performed with Ozzy?
KO: No, but I'm going to. I'm opening for him, which is so weird.
IB: Are you still dating Bert?
KO: No, I'm not dating him anymore (giggle). No, not anyone else, either.
IB: What was your most embarrassing on-camera moment?
KO: Oh, when I was drunk.
IB: When your friend fell off the table in Las Vegas?
KO: Oh, no. I wasn't drunk then. It was at my house.
IB: You're known for having the mouth of a truck driver. How old do you think you were when you dropped your first f-bomb?
KO: Oh my God, I don't even remember. It must have been when I was really, really little.
IB: Do you plan to go to college?
KO: No. I didn't even f---ing graduate high school.
IB: Who is your ideal Celebrity Deathmatch opponent?
KO: I don't know. That's a really good question. I guess Christina Aguilera. She's obnoxious and just fun to hate, you know?
IB: What's the craziest rumor you've heard about yourself?
KO: There's a big rumor going around right now that I've had a boob job. I don't know why. It's like in this business everyone wants to know everything and so many people have asked my stylist if I've had a boob job, and I'm like, "No!"
IB: Where do you see for yourself five or 10 years from now?
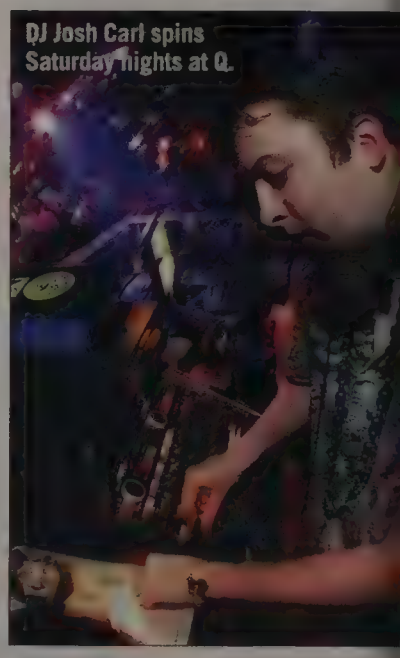
KO: I don't live for tomorrow, I live for today. It's like now everyone's obsessed with making money and everyone's obsessed with saving money. I just try to live by this philosophy. Just live for today. But I don't want to be richest person in the graveyard, you know? It can all slip through my fingers tomorrow, and I just don't care.—Jessica Iredale

CLUB SCENE

Superstar Thursdays



DJ Josh Carl spins Saturday nights at Q.

•In response to the recent Rhode Island tragedy, nightclubs all around the city have spent the past month carefully double checking their fire safety procedures. Lansdowne Street mega-club Avalon responded to the incident within days, adding a pop-up window to its Web site that illustrates the location of the club's 14 exits and 20 fire extinguishers. The club has also chosen to pare back the famously decadent Avaland decor on Friday nights as a fire safety precaution.

•While the Faneuil Hall area is probably better known for a fun and funky bar scene than for trendy dance clubs, the arrival of Q on nearby Union Street may herald a change. The New York–themed nightspot already boasts DJs spinning everything from hip-hop to house three nights a week: Fridays with Josh Spitaleri, Saturdays with Josh Carl and Sundays with Johnny C. Starting on March 27, Superstar Thursdays at Q will feature one of four well-known Boston jocks—Manolo, Paul Dailey, Rick Naples and Josh Carl—in a weekly rotating residency. For the opening night party, all four superstar DJs will play together.—Daniel Spurling

Dress in a Bag

I've always said that everything a woman needs should fit neatly in her purse. Imagine my delight, then, when I discovered Dress in a Bag. These cute, wrinkle-resistant dresses come rolled in a six-inch matching bag, perfect to tuck in your suitcase or even a large handbag. Dress in a Bag comes in more than 30 styles—from vibrant prints to pastel florals to basic black. A busy mom who had no time to shop for her next business trip created this innovative line of fashion. "I needed something stylish, compact and versatile to wear," says Maria Erickson, president of Fantasi International, manufacturers of Bette & Court golf fashions and resort wear. They're great for traveling, so you can save room in your suitcase for important things...like every shoe in your closet. Prices range from $50 to $74. www.dressinabag.com. —Samantha House

TIDBITS AND MORSELS

Critics in the Kitchen

Festivus for the Restivus...With a nod to the much-loved episode of Seinfeld, the Boston version of Festivus, a celebration of nothing in particular, kicked off March 6 and continues every Thursday night at Fire + Ice. Groups of four or more are invited to perform in front of the other diners—anything from singing and dancing to improv and miming. Participants get free dessert and prizes from Harpoon, and the winners receive a $100 gift certificate to Fire + Ice (and qualify for the Festivus Finale April 24, where the victors' spoils include dinner for 50 at Fire + Ice). 50 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-547-9007) and 205 Berkeley St., Boston (617-482-FIRE).

It's Show Time...Teatro, the latest addition to Tremont Street's bevy of bistros, was a bit of a pressure cooker on a recent Wednesday night. A veritable who's-who of the food critics' circle converged on the restaurant in one coincidental swoop, as five food critics/writers happened to dine on the same evening. Annie Copps and Corby Kummer of Boston Magazine, Sheryl Julian of the Boston Globe, Mat Schaffer of the Boston Herald and an unidentified New York Times critic were all present. Teatro's incredulous management reports that while it was certainly a stressful situation, it was fun to see some of the city's top foodies present at the same time.

Shackin' Up...Spring is almost here, which means summer's right around the corner. The timing couldn't be better for the opening of Jasper White's latest Summer Shack. The third installation of White's elbows-on-the-table seafood haven is set to open April 7 above Kings bowling alley in the Back Bay. High-maintenance diners be forewarned, the latest Summer Shack is even more do-it-yourself than its predecessors. The interior resembles the Cape's dime-a-dozen clam shacks, and patrons are responsible for placing their order at the window and waiting for their number to come up. With 180 seats, the dining space is much smaller than the Cambridge location but holds bragging rights to the largest raw bar in the city. A giant tank displays up to 4,000 shellfish at a time, so you can pick out your dinner and get your bib ready.

A Matter of Good Taste...Come late spring, the Museum of Fine Arts plans not only to celebrate palettes of color, but also to satisfy the palates of hungry visitors with the opening of its new restaurant, Bravo. Some details have yet to be finalized, but diners can expect the result to be as pleasing to the eye as it is to the tastebuds. The eatery will exhibit a rotating selection of the museum's modern masterpieces, beginning with works by Claudio Bravo, and serve the delicacies of Wolfgang Puck–trained executive chef Benjamin Cevelo.—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

IMPROPER REPORTS

Parlez-Vous Freedom?

Who knew that a small fast food joint in North Carolina could spark a small-scale, national movement? When Cubbie's of Beaufort, N.C., took the "French" out of their fries and replaced it with "freedom"—a protest against French lack of support for action against Iraq—many American restaurants listened. The menu change has gained momentum and is moving northward—last week Capitol Hill embraced the trend by 86-ing the word "French" from all House menus. We asked a few local restaurateurs if they too will be serving up sides of freedom fries.

•Bartley's Burger Cottage, Cambridge: Is it something you would consider doing? "Absolutely. It's a riot—right up our alley," says owner Bill Bartley. "We poke fun at everything and everybody—both sides equally."

•Charlie's Kitchen, Cambridge: Will it catch on? "I hope not, it's kind of silly. I don't think there's any real direct connection with the French and with deep-fried potatoes. I think that's a little gratuitous myself," says manager Dana Sibley.

•Big City, Allston: "I think it's pretty ridiculous…calling them freedom fries or French fries is the least of our worries," says owner Marc Kadish. "It's really not going to make much of a difference either way if we do or don't. I'd tell those people calling them freedom fries to get a life."

•Blue Cat Café, Boston: "I don't think it'll catch on here because I don't think this area takes well to gimmicks," says assistant manager Tim Bonehill, adding, "A good portion of the population here is liberal, and I think they thrive on being politically correct."

•Firefly, Boston: "I would never ever do it myself—mainly because I feel like our country is a democracy with freedom of choice, and the French also have the choice to not get involved in [the war]," says a manager who wished to be anonymous. "More than half our country is opposed to this war, but we shouldn't direct our anger towards the French."

•T's Pub, Boston: "It's something new, something different, I think it's a good idea. Boston is known for the freedom trail," says a manager.

High-Steppin' Henley...Don Henley (right) is getting outfitted for an Eagles reunion tour this summer. The musician/Walden Pond preservationist was so taken with his New Balance 991's that he took strides to have several additional pairs custom made in his hard-to-find size of 11 AA. The New England–based athletic shoe company happily complied. You can catch Henley achieving New Balance on stage at the FleetCenter July 15, 16 and 18.

Monkeying Around...For the past 14 years, Back Bay's Hard Rock Café has supported rock 'n' roll's standouts. Now it's ready to show off some stand-ups. Emerson College's student improv and sketch comedy troupe, the Swollen Monkey Showcase, kicked off the Hard Rock's Cavern Club comedy series March 12. The series is on a trial run Wednesday nights through March 26, so if you like the idea of a new comedy night, you'd better show up and support the Monkeys while you can. 131 Clarendon St., Boston (617-424-7625). 8pm. $5.

Jingle All the Way...If you're dying to achieve your requisite 15 minutes of fame, here are two not-so-conventional potential star-making opportunities. Crunch Fitness is searching for the next home exercise video star. Get your creative juices flowing, because they're not looking for just any old workout—the five-minute video entries should be more inventive. Think Pedicure Yoga or California Surf-A-Robics. Finalists will demonstrate their routine May 8 in front of a panel of celebrity judges. The winning video will be shot professionally and sold in all Crunch locations. If physical fitness isn't your forte, try this one: Aspiring singers can audition to be the next Chock full o' Nuts ("…is that heavenly coffee") jingler March 27 at Faneuil Hall. Whoever gives the best interpretation of the classic jingle moves on to the final round—and the chance to win $10,000. Crunch: www.crunch.com; coffee: jingleinfo@mobilemarketing.com

Salubrious Suds...Slugging back a few brewskis usually lands us on the couch, remote in hand, Al Bundy style. But the folks at Harpoon are inspiring a philanthropic movement amongst hopheads. Apparently the brewmeisters have been do-gooders all along—donating thousands of dollars to New England charities and beer to charitable events. Their altruism continues with Harpoon Helps, a community endeavor to lend a hand to the less fortunate. All are welcome to join the Harpoon team March 22 to prep the Greater Boston Food Bank's stock room for deliveries to local shelters. Contact lmelby@harpoonbrewery.com for more information.

Pretty Fly

Those Wright Brothers really might have been onto something

Small planes tend to get a bad rep from the media. The last time a small plane made the news for something other than crashing, Charles Lindbergh was the pilot. Celebrities don't help matters. Some people no doubt shun small planes ever since JFK Jr. flew his to the great Camelot in the sky, an accident as tragic as that metaphor. But come on, people. Did you stop riding in chauffered Mercedes limos after Lady Di's crash? I certainly didn't. My bodyguard, my lover and I are fleeing the paparazzi in one right now. Life must go on.

If you're intrigued by the idea of flying, fold your umbrella, climb down off that barn roof and head to your local airport, where the Be a Pilot program (www.beapilot.com) will hook you up with a lesson for $49.

I took a lesson at Hanscom Field, where stunt planes and $40 million Gulfstream private jets litter the runway. However, the most exotic, potentially lethal piece of machinery at Hanscom sits in the hallway outside the Executive Flyers flight school. It is—get ready—a hot-sandwich vending machine. Its technology raises all sorts of questions: How does it make the sandwiches? Is there a little robotic sandwich artist in there who will ask which vegetables I want? How often are new sandwich components loaded into this thing? And how long will it be before some unfortunate contestants are eating the Sandwich-O-Matic hot pastrami on Fear Factor?

Even if he doesn't eat those sandwiches, my flight instructor, Sean Ehret, is a brave man. Ehret's job is to regularly climb into planes piloted by people who have no idea how to fly planes. There's no triangular yellow sign on the roof of our trainer plane, although perhaps there ought to be.

The Be a Pilot literature implies that if you can walk and chew gum at the same time, you can fly a plane, but I'd argue it's a skill more like chewing crackers and whistling; instrument flying and multi-engine planes are more like eating cotton candy and skipping rope. Your basic controls are a knob for engine power, a knob to adjust the fuel mixture, the trim wheel, the flaps lever, the yoke (pull to go up, push to go down, etc.), the pedals, (which control the direction you bank) and the right and left brakes, which also help steer on the ground. Only once you've mastered all those should you even think about using the cupholders.

We taxi out of our parking space and Ehret attempts to familiarize me with the controls, but I'm no better at following a straight line than an America West pilot. Still, I make it to the runway, we get clearance, and after a brief amble down the strip we're airborne. It's actually pretty easy.

Ehret shows me how to plot a course on the GPS, we practice turns, and then I try a couple of extremely wobbly landings. It's hard to tell how much Ehret is helping me with his own controls because I'm preoccupied with the pedals and yoke, trying to ensure that we land wheels-side-down. But for all I know he's disconnected my controls in the interest of his safety, my own, and that of all homeowners in the Hanscom Field area.

When we land there's a commotion in the hangar area. While I was lurching around the local airspace in our Cessna, another pilot had critically damaged an aerobatic training plane without leaving his parking space. Have you ever got into your car and attempted to drive away with the parking brake on? When you do that in a plane, you can make the propeller slam into the pavement. Since the propeller is directly connected to the motor, that guy just bought a $25,000 plane engine.

After my flight I spoke with Drew Steketee, CEO of Be a Pilot, about flying in general. Since prop-driven planes aren't that fast (our groundspeed on my flight was about 100mph), I saw no huge practical advantage over driving. Steketee replied that when you're flying to any New England vacation spot on a weekend and you're looking down on miles of traffic jams, 100mph seems speedy indeed. And you can rent a plane quite cheaply. And if you're going to an island, you don't have to get on a ferry. And chicks think pilots are yummier than Godiva chocolate truffle ice cream.

OK, I said that last one. Clearly, the media needs to get busy perpetuating some positive stereotypes right away, because I think I'm going to flight school. Did you know that pilots have big propellers? iB

Soroff/On

Frederick Wiseman

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Award-winning documentary filmmaker Frederick Wiseman was born and raised in Boston and went to Williams before earning his law degree at Yale in 1954. In 1967, he made his debut film, Titicut Follies, which offered an uncompromising view of life at the state prison for the criminally insane in Bridgewater. The film was banned in Massachusetts for more than 20 years but immediately established his reputation as one of the world's foremost documentarians. Since then, he has gone on to make almost a film per year, each focusing on a different American institution. Among them are High School, Hospital, Basic Training, Model, Aspen, Near Death and Ballet. His two latest films, Domestic Violence and Domestic Violence 2, air nationally on PBS on March 18 and 19, respectively. In addition to directing theater and publishing articles in scholarly journals and mainstream magazines, Wiseman has received numerous awards and honorary degrees, including three Emmys, a MacArthur and a Guggenheim fellowship and membership in the American Academy of Arts and Letters. His production company, Zipporah Films, is located in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: Your work has a common theme of exploring institutions. Is there one that you could identify as the most in need of fixing in our society?

Frederick Wiseman: No. I try to avoid generalizations like that, because I hope I've learned something about the subjects of the films but I think it would be a mistake to represent myself as an expert on them.

JS: What's your political affiliation, or do you even have one?

FW: I'm a Groucho-ist.

JS: As in not being a member of any club that would have you?

FW: Right.

JS: Well, have your political views ever informed your choice of a subject for a film?

FW: It depends on what you mean by political opinion. The choice of subjects for my documentaries reflects my interests. It's very important to me to have the final film represent what I learned as a consequence of being at the place for anywhere from four to 11 weeks, and then studying the material in the course of editing for over a year. There wouldn't be any point in making the film if I knew how it was going to come out, or if I was only making it to prove a thesis. So I try to have the film reflect what I learn, not my preexisting views.

JS: Which would you say is closer to being objective—documentary filmmaking or journalism?

FW: The whole business of objectivity I never really understood. Everything about filmmaking represents a choice, and the way I respond to that question is by saying that my films are a condensed, compressed, biased, prejudiced affair.

JS: So would you guess that journalism, similarly, is a form of fiction?

FW: Obviously, there are terrific journalists and lousy journalists, or indifferent journalists, but there are a lot of similar issues: compression, what you highlight, the choices made. I like to think that the way I edit the films is related more to novel writing than to journalism. Not that I value novel writing more. It's just different. A journalist has to lead, in the first paragraph, with the classic Who, What, When, Where and Why. I don't, because I'm not creating a fact-based structure. I'm trying to create a dramatic structure.

"EACH FILM IS ITS OWN ADVENTURE... FOR ME, GOING TO THE SOUTH POLE IS NO MORE OF AN ADVENTURE THAN SPENDING A MONTH IN A SHELTER."

JS: Favorite film of all time?

FW: I'm very partial to A Day at the Races.

JS: Any guilty pleasures—James Bond, or Jerry Lewis, maybe?

FW: No, not really.

JS: Ever been tempted to go Hollywood?

FW: I once wrote a screenplay on commission, and a couple of times I turned down things that I just wasn't interested in, but it's not as if Hollywood has ever been after me in a major way. A couple of times, they've beckoned slightly. It's just not my scene. I hope I don't ever have to make a movie other than one I really want to make, and I've tried very hard to stick to that.

JS: Is that an advantage of working in Cambridge instead of L.A.?

FW: For me it is, because I'm not part of the scene. The moment I arrive in Los Angeles, my bullshit meter goes right off the board.

JS: Best thing about working with PBS?

FW: Well, PBS has been extremely generous with me, particularly in running all my films and programming them in prime time.

JS: Worst thing?

FW: It's unfortunate that public television doesn't have more funds available. In France, for example, one or two percent of the national budget goes to the arts. Here, the total budget for the National Endowment for the Arts is something like $90 million a year. In France, that might be the budget for Lyon.

JS: Most depressing thing you ever filmed?

FW: I think the movie about domestic violence.

JS: One event in history you would have liked to make a documentary about?

FW: That's a fun question. Probably the crucifixion.

JS: Why?

FW: Because when I was young I was accused of killing Christ.

JS: How do you feel about the fact that Massachusetts banned Titicut Follies for over 20 years?

FW: How do I feel? Is there any way I could have liked it? I feel completely vindicated now, and I thought the ban was an act of vast hypocrisy.

JS: Do you view your own life or your own experience through the lens of a filmmaker?

FW: No. I try not to apply my professional eye to my own experience.

JS: Ever get involved emotionally with a subject, and if so, how do you deal with it?

FW: It's impossible not to, in the sense that I experience feelings about what I see in front of me, whether it's domestic violence, or when I did Near Death, or when I made the movie about Army basic training and knew that the young soldiers would be shipped off to Vietnam soon. So it varies, but I'm almost always involved in trying to understand what the experience is like for the people in the film.

JS: Doesn't that take a tremendous toll?

FW: No. It's necessary, both in the shooting and the editing, to try and figure out how the people feel and what's going on, but it's never made me depressed or anything.

JS: Is there a point at which a documentarian has a moral obligation to get involved in the action they're witnessing?

FW: Again, I'm not very good with generalizations, but if some cruelty is going on which your intervention can thwart, absolutely.

JS: Has that ever happened to you?

FW: Not really. In Law and Order, there's a scene where the police are looking for a woman accused of being a prostitute, who knocked a vice squad policeman down the stairs of some seedy hotel in Kansas City. She fled and hid in the basement. I was with the cops when they found her, and one of the cops started to strangle her in front of the camera, and then he let her go. He had his arm around her neck for 20 or 30 seconds, and while I was thinking about intervening, he stopped, so I didn't have to. But it certainly occurred to me. It also occurred to me that if I'd intervened it might have been the end of the movie.

JS: Is there an adventure documentary you would have liked to have made, like Everest, or the Shackleton story?

FW: No. All my documentaries are an adventure for me, because I'm usually entering, intensely and for a period of time, into a world that I know nothing about. That's part of the fun. Each film is its own adventure. It's a different sort, but for me, going to the South Pole is no more of an adventure than spending a month in a shelter.

JS: What one person would you trust to make a documentary about you?

FW: My late mother. Actually, I retract that. The answer is I wouldn't.

FW: 36.

JS: Ever think about slowing down?

FW: No, I don't. I like working. It's not a particular strain for me. I enjoy it. There may come a time when I have to slow down, but I'm busier now than I ever have been. iB

DELICIOUS DESIGNS

Five new restaurants guarantee that your surroundings are as spectacular as what's on your plate

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GREG PREMRU
ASSISTED BY RICH BAKER

Although there is a certain comfort to slipping into your favorite booth and ordering "the usual" at your trusty neighborhood haunt, sometimes you hunger for just the opposite: an exciting new restaurant whose food and decor combine to make a complete, sensory experience. The good news is, we've tracked down five such cutting-edge Boston establishments. Four have just opened their doors, and one is poised to do so, but they all share a common trait: close collaboration between the owners and designers to nurture a distinct, out-of-the-ordinary vision. In the following interviews, find out how these new restaurants have put food and atmosphere into perfect synergy.

Meritage

BOSTON HARBOR HOTEL
70 Rowes Wharf, Boston
(617-439-3995)
Opening date: October 2002
Cuisine: Wine-compatible contemporary food
Square footage: 2,800
Seats: 88

Jinnie Kim, Daniel Bruce and Julianna Bruce

In October, chef Daniel Bruce of the Boston Harbor Hotel realized his longtime dream of opening his own restaurant. Meritage's novel approach to food—its menu offers both small and large plates and suggests complementary wines for each dish—is not surprising given Bruce's 14-year stint as executive chef of the Boston Wine Festival, which he founded. To create the right setting for his unique dining concept, the hotel's owners connected Bruce with Boston-based designer Jinnie Kim whose company, Jinnie Kim Designs, has completed hundreds of projects in the U.S. and abroad. For the finishing touches, Bruce's wife, Julianna, an artist, created wine-themed paintings that hang on each side of the impressive wine storage cases. The result is a warm, elegant space with a gorgeous harbor view and an obvious reverence for wine.

Daniel Bruce, chef

Which did you finish first, the menu or the interior design?
Before we began to design, I had concepted the menu. We've developed a wine-and-food focus at the hotel, so our menu is written like a wine list and features the small plate/large plate concept. For each wine, we offer food suggestions that will pair well with that style of wine.
Is there a story behind the restaurant's name?
California winemakers coined the term Meritage for the Bordeaux blending style of wine that they produced. It's actually a combination of the words heritage and merit. I liked it because the word is symbolic of a blending—in the restaurant's case, the blending of wine and food together.
How is the wine focus reflected in the design?
We have the largest installation of Sub-Zeros [wine storage systems] ever put together for a restaurant—1,360 bottles are showcased in two Sub-Zero banks. So, the sommelier can go right to the Sub-Zeros and bring the wine to the table—it adds to the homey feeling.
How does Meritage's design differ from other restaurants in Boston?
The menu concept and the restaurant's design are both new to Boston, the menu being derivative of a wine list more than a food menu and the room being a new concept, the way it looks and feels—I don't know of another room like it in this town. Because they're both "out of the box," the food and the room go together well. They're both contemporary but easily approached. Also, unlike a lot of places in Boston, we actually have a good outside view!

Jinnie Kim, designer

Can you describe your concept for the space?
The theme they gave me was wine, so having wine storage as a focal point of the design was key—that was the No. 1 direction.
Before Meritage opened, how did the hotel use the space?
It was a function room.
What was the biggest challenge in designing this space?
Making it look attractive when you have a low ceiling and a long room. The only thing going for this room was the view. We decided to put everything at a 45-degree angle, using an angled pattern in the wood floor. Then, since wood's not practical for a bar floor, we came up with a silver slate floor in the bar area that would match up.
The light fixtures are unusual; what's the story behind them?
Because it's such a long room, we wanted something that would keep the eye from following a straight line. So after they hung the lights, my team and I bent each light at a certain angle. We call it the Milky Way.
What other spaces have you designed?
Meritage was such a fun project for me because I usually design very classical hotels. In New York, I designed the St. Regis, and I'm now doing the Plaza Hotel. I also did the Excelsior Hotel in Florence and recently completed the Grand Hyatt in Dubai.

UpStairs on the Square

91 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-864-1933)
Opening date: November 2002
Cuisine: New American
Square footage: 6,000
Seats: 100 in the Monday Club Bar; 80 in the Soirée Room

Most restaurant-goers will agree that Harvard Square was missing a certain je ne sais quoi after the crimson giant usurped UpStairs at the Pudding's 20-year Holyoke Street throne in 2001. Luckily, Pudding proprietors Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes found a space, just blocks away, that rivals their former digs in both location and charm. The building's quaint brick facade masks an interior design that's been described as Alice in Wonderland meets Moulin Rouge. Downstairs, the casual Monday Club Bar hosts a color scheme that rivals a box of Crayola crayons, with pink ceilings; magenta, purple and gold floors; and chartreuse walls embellished with 23-karat gold leaf. Upstairs, in the upscale yet equally bold Soirée Room, a mirrored ceiling reflects the leopard-print floor, bubble-gum-color walls and roaring fireplace. Hughes, in the triple role of co-owner, chef and designer, is the mastermind behind UpStairs on the Square's punchy, tradition-bucking decor.

Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes

Deborah Hughes, chef, co-owner and designer

What was your concept for the space and what feeling were you trying to evoke?
The Monday Club is what we call artisanal and sexy. When you enter, it's a progression of sensations. The sound, smell and color are evocative of something pleasant and comfortable. We introduce concepts on the first floor and develop them on the second. Everything is a plaid or a grid with ovoids on top. It's the same with the food. On the first floor you can order anything from grilled cheese to caviar, and in the Soirée room it's more developed. A good design is like good food: You don't necessarily understand how all the pieces got there. It should be more than the sum of its parts.

What did you spend the most money on?
It's really hard to say because I got great prices and deals on everything in the place. I'm a chef, and chefs know how to make a dollar go a long way. Being in the position of chef/owner/designer really gave me the sense of where the dollars need to be. I guess the Monday Club bar stools were really expensive. Some are from Paris, and some are from Milan.

What was the biggest design challenge?
Working with other people. I always know in my mind how I want something to be, and I came in here with a design already in my head. When I said pink ceiling, people said absolutely not. I said plaid walls, they said "How could you?" A pink, purple and gold floor? "Don't go there." So it was a challenge getting through the preconceptions.

What's your favorite element/design aspect of the space—what's most striking or unusual about the space?
The sliding doors, painted by Claire Eder, that open from the Monday Club into the Zebra Room. When you look through the paint, you can see out onto the Square. And we're about to write on all the mirrors [flanking the bar]. I can't wait. We haven't decided what we're writing yet, but it's going to be something kitschy. Also, we just put up this lighting fixture. I call it "love letters." I originally wanted to have it on a pulley so that it could come down and our guests could write on it. But we decided to just keep it stationary. So, some of the letters are ours, some are the designers and some are our customers'.

What was the space before?
It was the Market Theatre, which is coming back, and we hope it will return to Cambridge.

What elements stayed the same?
The windows in the Soirée Room. They're historical and protected, so I would never change them.

What other spaces have you designed?
What was able to be designed at the other restaurant, I designed. Especially the garden; that was mine. And I've done my condo. It's been in magazines, and my house is going to be in magazines. I do it by the seat of my pants. I'm a chef and if you like to cook, it's like an extension of that. It's normal to want to create the atmosphere that your food is presented in.

Have you brought anything from UpStairs at the Pudding to this location?
The chairs I love, so they stayed the same.

Teatro

177 Tremont St., Boston (617-778-6841)
Opening date: January 2003
Cuisine: Rustic Italian
Square footage: 2,000 (total)
Seats: 98

Teatro opened earlier this year in an extensively renovated space, formerly Galleria Italiana, on Tremont Street. The restaurant's name reflects the establishment's proximity to both the Theater District and the Loews cinema next door. Chef/owner Jamie Mammano's goal was to create a restaurant where patrons can have a casual yet delicious Italian meal before catching a nearby show. Helping him achieve this goal were New York-based designer Celeste Cooper of Repertoire and general manager Jeffrey Iovino.

Jeffrey Iovino, general manager

This space has seen several renovations. Can you describe its past lives?

Before it was Teatro, it was another restaurant. But before that, it was a synagogue, and now it looks more like the synagogue than it does the previous restaurant, particularly with the ceiling. We even matched the original gold leaf on the ceiling with gold-leaf paint.

What did you spend the most money on?

Restoring the ceiling. A drop ceiling had been installed below the original, and when we took it down, we discovered all the utilities were there between the drop ceiling and the original. So to expose the original, we had to move all the utilities back behind the walls.

Were there any improvised solutions that came up during the restoration?

We extended the floor about three feet at the front of the room, where we installed the big arched window. But since we kept the original floor tiles, we couldn't go and buy more tiles for the new area. So we hired an artist to hand-paint the floor in that three-foot area to match the pattern of the stones in the tiles. You don't notice unless you look carefully, and it's holding up pretty well.

Jamie Mammano, chef/owner

Why did you select Celeste Cooper as your designer?

I've been working with Celeste for years. She did XV Beacon and Mistral, so it was natural that she'd do this.

How did you work out the design concept with her?

We brought her in early on and told her about our concept—this is a place to eat that's casual, comfortable and cool. She made suggestions, and we either went with them or didn't, but I'd say we went with 95 percent of them. You don't question the queen.

How does the design work with your concept for the restaurant?

The basic idea was to take the antiquity of the place and combine it with the new and exciting. The black granite tabletops and bar, for instance, are very modern, but the ceiling, walls and floor were kept original. It's a nice contrast.

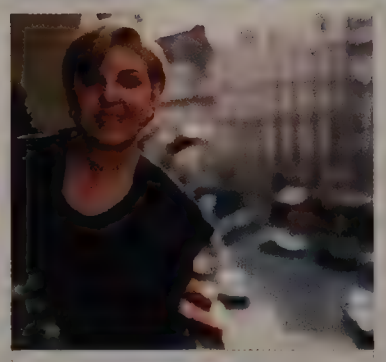
What do you like most about the design?

The whole thing. It must've been gorgeous when they first built it. But I like the whole look. It's very unique in Boston.

Whose idea was it to have the staff's uniforms match the blue neon ceiling lighting?

That was actually a coincidence. The uniforms were designed by Nicole Romano of Rhode Island, and the first time we turned on the neon, it happened to match the shirts.

Jamie Mammano



Celeste Cooper

Celeste Cooper, designer

Can you describe your concept for the space and the feeling you are trying to evoke?

The concept was a casual restaurant but very much in the European manner—not straining to be hip—and inspired by the existing architecture we discovered upon "excavating" the space: the terrazzo floor, the limestone walls and that incredible ceiling. The concept is also related to the cinemas, theaters and clubs that surround it and whose patrons would be our patrons...sort of a combination of Renaissance painting and commedia dell'arte!

What was the biggest design challenge?

The long, narrow axis with nowhere else to go.

What's your favorite design aspect of the space, and what makes it different from other restaurants in Boston?

The juxtaposition of old and new—the architecture and what's within it. It doesn't look like any other restaurant in Boston.

What other restaurants have you designed, and how did those experiences influence your work here?

L'Espalier, Mistral, the Federalist. Each project is its own "thing" with its own story to tell, and I am always looking for new ways to explore what I'm feeling at the moment.

The colors you've chosen are atypical for restaurants. What drew you to them?

The blue ceiling came from the color of the sky in a Botticelli painting, the green [upholstery] because I love the fabric and that was the best color with the blue. Wish I had a swankier answer for you!

The walls are stark, with no art. What made you go with that decision, and how does it affect the feel of the space?

I am a big believer in the necessity of art in the context of a space—XV Beacon, for example. But here we were on a strict budget, and if you can't do it right, leave it out. Having been there recently, the hustle and bustle of the restaurant leads me to think that it was a good decision after all. With so much going on, the art could not have been fully appreciated.

Kings

10 Scotia St., Boston (617-266-2695)
Opening date: March 13, 2003
Cuisine: American
Square footage: 34,000
Seats: 300 (total capacity, includes 80 in the deVille lounge/restaurant)

Kings, located in the old Cheri Cinema, was originally conceived as yet another incarnation of the Summer Shack, but the restaurateurs soon found that the space was too cavernous for a restaurant alone. As co-owner/designer Patrick Lyons says, necessity is the mother of invention, so the bowling alley/restaurant/lounge/billiards hall idea was born. The colorful, late '60s/early '70s–themed space includes the deVille lounge/restaurant, 16 lanes of tenpin bowling (including four private lanes), a lounge with eight billiards tables, and the Kingpin room decorated with memorabilia from the Farrelly brothers' movie Kingpin. Kings' classic American fare is prepared by Art Welch, who was sous chef at Sonsie for seven years. Lyons created Kings with the help of decorative artist Annie Wood, who has also put her creative touches on Bonfire, the Paradise Lounge and Lucky's.

Patrick Lyons, co-owner/designer

What is unique about the design?

It's styled the way they would have styled it in the '60s if they had today's technology. We're true to '60s design and feeling—it's classic retro—yet state-of-the-art computers are integrated. It's a warm feeling, but electric at the same time.

What feeling does the design concept evoke?

Comfort. We're trying to bring people back to another time, transport people to another era, and give them everything that comes with it. The Americana theme harkens back to a simpler time and place in our collective consciousness. This is about something that a lot of people haven't gotten lately. Bowling, lounging and billiards are old activities, and we've tied them together. We're not trying to be trendy at all. It's for people who are looking for something down-home. It's comfortable and stylish but not trendy. It's anti-trendy. I'm bored with trendy.

What was the most difficult aspect of designing a bowling alley/lounge/restaurant?

We came into a hulk of an ugly structure. Trying to make sense of a defunct movie theater with pitched floors and making it work for bowling was very complicated. It's been a brutal 12 months, but the greatest part is seeing it complete. It will qualify itself as a good remake of a space. The thousands of former Cheri movie-goers won't even recognize it.

Did you enjoy the dual responsibilities of co-owner and designer?

It's the most fun project I've ever done in my career—and I've done 36 different places.

Annie Wood, decorative artist

Kings' design is described as "retro-fied." What does that mean?

The word "retro" scares me a bit; it's not diner-ish '50s style. We're late '60s/early '70s, so we borrowed elements from that time, with key decorative tributes to modern art as well. We've got a '60s-style painting like [Robert] Indiana's Love, but it says "Bowl." And we've got a painting in the style of [Charles] Demuth's painting of the number five, but we modified it to be a strike symbol to fit the bowling motif.

Which room is your favorite, design-wise?

The lobby. We kept the marble from the old Cheri lobby. There's a bar where the candy counter used to be. We bought interiors of the old Walex bowling alley in Waltham. We salvaged as much as we could. We restored their benches and made counters and a bar top from the actual bowling alley.

Christopher Myers and David Manfredi

On the heels of their latest successful endeavor, Via Matta, co-owners Christopher Myers and Michael Schlow will soon open Great Bay—which Myers calls "a magnificent new direction for a seafood restaurant in Boston"—in the Hotel Commonwealth. Together, the pair worked with architect David Manfredi of Elkus/Manfredi in Boston to harmonize Great Bay's design with chef Jeremy Sewall's menu of contemporary American cuisine with an emphasis on fresh-off-the-boat New England seafood.

Christopher Myers, co-owner

Why did you select David Manfredi as your designer?
He loves to eat, first of all. He travels a great deal, and he knows restaurant design all over the world. He loves hospitality, and he knows that ultimately that is the business that we're in. The first priority of a designer and owner is to make an environment that piques interest, sure, but creates comfort first and foremost.

How did you work out the design concept with him?
As soon as Michael Schlow and I saw the space, we said "Wow! This is it." Tall, masculine, dying for a restaurant! In fact, it sounded hungry—the space, that is. We knew that the job was to make it comfortable without creating false intimacy. It's a big damn space, so we decided not to be afraid of it. Boston does not need another quaint little restaurant. It needs a space with some adventure and some chutzpah. Small and cozy is one thing the ocean is not.

How does the design work with your concept for the restaurant?
Everything we did, every conversation, we just kept asking ourselves, "What does this have to do with the ocean, the sea, fish, fishermen, sand, clams, and on and on?" You might not go into the place and see that, but we hope you might feel it. The ceiling is arched, like the back of a fish or the hull of a boat. The curtains are mixed and cut into pieces, representing fish scales. The floor was left somewhat rough, like the wood of docks. The bar-back material looks like it's made of seashells or some other element of the sea. We wanted everything to coordinate with Jeremy Sewall's menu concept but without making a place that was "theme-y" or ridiculous.

What makes this design different from other Boston restaurants?
Let's start with no plastic. All of our materials are made of sand, stone, shell, natural materials. Even the synthetic elements we used were chosen because they might shimmer like organic materials. The place is not afraid to be big, to be awesome.

David Manfredi, designer

Can you describe your concept for the space and the feeling you are trying to evoke?
The space and the food are inextricably bound together. The theme is an abstract allusion to the water and the sea—all things wet. Every finish, color and material was selected with the sense of the menu and the notion that this was going to be Boston's great seafood restaurant. The chairs, for example, are casual, like beach chairs; there's an abstract reference to water. The tabletops are made of resin acrylic—another reference to the water. We love the fact that the sheer curtains shimmer—we adjusted the air flow so that they'd move and shine like the scales of a fish. The bar is backlit and looks like light filtering through water. And guests will come in from the street into a glass vestibule—a half-circle of glass that goes from floor to ceiling, like a big bubble in the water.

What did you spend the most money on?
We spent money on providing great acoustics despite the high ceilings. Also, providing comfortable furniture in the bar and the dining room was of utmost importance. Finally, we spent a lot on the construction of the bar to make it appear warm and rich.

What other restaurants have you designed?
Via Matta, Harvest and the Rock Center Café in Rockefeller Center.

What was your biggest design challenge with this restaurant?
We inherited a very large space with a very high ceiling. That's a wonderful asset, but at the same time, we didn't want the space to be too grand or too formal. We wanted to give the sense of a great room, but one with some whimsy. The lighting fixtures, for example, are not terribly serious. They're an abstract allusion to effervescent things in the water. The space is regular and axial, but the light fixtures are quite random and irregular. We want you to smile. iB

urban RENEWAL

We asked local designers for inexpensive ways to turn an uninspired, tiny apartment into a charming, welcoming oasis

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE AND SUSAN ABBATTISTA
PHOTOGRAPHS BY JONAS KAHN

Though it may be true that everyone wants a room of one's own, making that room a beautiful, comfortable haven is not so easy. Where do you put the furniture? What should you hang on the walls? How do you introduce new flourishes that mix well with the items you already own? If you live in the city, you may face an even bigger challenge: making the most of tight space while staying within a limited budget.

With those concerns in mind, we sought the professional advice of some Boston-based design specialists: Debra and Natalia Szidon of Cocoon home goods store, and interior designer Michael Valvo of Red M Studio. Their challenge: to revamp a 450-square-foot, one-bedroom dwelling in Boston's North End. The space was functional but uninspired. Its occupant, a 20-something professional woman with an active social life, sought to breathe new life into rooms she found boring. But naturally, she didn't want to go broke doing it.

We asked the designers to focus their attention on one room: the Szidons took on the living room, while Valvo concentrated on the bedroom. Their ideas are a starting point; those on a more limited budget can do a little searching and come up with interesting alternatives that are even less costly.

Living Room
AFTER

THE DESIGNERS:

Mother-in-law and daughter-in-law team Debra and Natalia Szidon opened Cocoon in the Ladder District two years ago. Debra has a background in high-end furniture retail, and Natalia previously owned a botanicals business. In the past two years, the Szidons have had many requests to design customers' homes. "It was a natural transition," says Natalia. "It began when we opened Cocoon; then we started doing botanical consulting, which means bringing nature (barks, plants and flowers) indoors. We then moved on to creating a complete interior vision." In their designs, they use products from their own store—which stocks furniture and accessories made both abroad and in the United States—and from other sources.

FIRST IMPRESSION:

According to Debra and Natalia, getting to know the client is the first priority when creating a livable masterpiece. "We want them to be happy with the outcome. They hired us for our aesthetic, but we realize that they're the ones who'll be living in the space, " says Debra. "The final product ends up being a little bit of all of us."

In this case, Debra and Natalia both felt that the living room needed to better reflect the outgoing personality and aesthetic sensibility of its occupant. A tabletop vase filled with tulips and a wonderful modern oil painting were working well, but the furniture needed to be rearranged to maximize the limited space and make the room more inviting.

THE SOLUTIONS:

Because the budget for the project was limited, Debra and Natalia focused on relatively inexpensive changes that would have a big impact: making a slipcover for the existing sofa, painting the walls and installing new window treatments. "If you have limited funds, the best things you can do to completely change the look and feel of a space are to add color to the walls, add bold fabric to the windows and put some life into it with botanicals," Natalia says. Taking their color cues from the black and gold painting hanging in the living room, they painted the living room walls gold and recovered the sofa in a warm-toned chenille fabric; its geometric print has a slightly retro feel that reflects the occupant's sophisticated side.

"Since our client is known for her frequent parties, we selected a soft golden hue for the walls, one that would radiate warmth and welcome," says Natalia. "She also loves fresh flowers, so dramatic vases with leafy botanicals adorn the walls without taking up limited floor space."

To form a partition between the living room and bedroom areas, the Szidons designed a curtain from a large-print fabric in cotton sateen (for more on the fabrics, see box on page 26) and suspended the treatment from copper rods and rings bought at Home Depot. It can be difficult to make two such strong patterns work together, but a unifying color scheme removes the guesswork. "There is a nice contrast between the two items," says Natalia. "It adds a certain yin-and-yang element."

The final touches included some items from their own store, such as three hanging glass lamps over the couch, a South American jute area rug bordered in genuine cowhide, a bamboo coffee table and three orange suede throw pillows. The end result is a beautiful living space with a 1940s feel, perfect for entertaining or just relaxing.

THE DESIGNER:

Michael Valvo developed an interest in interior design when he was in college studying accounting and visited his friend's parents' home. Struck by the blend of design and architecture, he became instantly inspired. A few years later, he enrolled in the New England School of Art & Design in Boston. He went on to launch a successful career in residential design and teach at NESAD.

After 20 years in the business, Valvo was looking for a new challenge, so he recently moved into a larger studio and is now creating fabric and custom lighting in his new venture, Red M Studio in the North End.

Valvo is known for his romantic designs that are functional and striking. Some of his favorite stores include Koo de Kir, Montage and Cocoon. But, he says, "you don't always have to spend a fortune to do it right. I also love Urban Outfitters and Anthropologie. A talented designer can make anything work well."

FIRST IMPRESSION:

"The first thing I thought when I walked in the door was that the room needed some life. The person who lives here is so fun and alive, and that was not at all reflected in her surrounding," says Valvo. A bedroom, he says, should reflect every bit of the occupant's personality. It should be sexy, romantic and fun.

THE SOLUTIONS:

Looking to add life to the bedroom without making it look silly or crowded, he started with the walls, opting to incorporate three beautiful colors. A sea-blue was brought a third of the way up the wall, meeting a purplish horizontal stripe. A warm yellow filled the top section. This technique created the illusion that the room was larger. "The easiest way to change a room is by changing the color of it," says Valvo. "I didn't want to have to add a lot of artwork to the walls, so I improvised with the design of the paint application."

Valvo then created some new lines in the room. He angled the bed and hung a parasol above it to draw the eyes up toward the ceiling. "The bedding was ruled by what was already there. I wanted to play up the height of it. The low bed gives the ceiling the illusion of height," he says.

The bed was covered with a handmade bedspread in a woven blend fabric, along with white cotton sateen sheets. A large square pillow trimmed with fringe acts as a headboard, and a bolster in the same striped fabric as the bedspread retains continuity. "The look and feel of the bed make you just want to jump right into it," says Valvo. A simple bedside table houses all of the immediate necessities. And a small computer cart table and a green Lucite chair from Kartell help create a functional work space. For the window treatment, Valvo chose the white silk burn out sheer fabric because "it allows light to come in and casts a shadow in the form of the design all over the room."

"Design is not about reproducing the past. It's about creating something new by taking elements from all around you," says Valvo. The result? A youthful room that is both functional and fun. iB

The seamstress:

Creating custom slipcovers and drapery is truly an art, and with 10 years' experience and clients all over the world, seamstress Laurel Benner of Boston-based By Design is an artist. For this project, she sewed everything from the custom sofa slipcover to the drapes to the bedspread and pillowcases in both the living room and bedroom. Benner brings her sewing machine and fabric into the client's home and works there. A custom slipcover usually takes about 20 hours, with drapery and bedding taking significantly less time.

The fabrics:

All the fabric used in both the bedroom and living room is from Zimman's in Lynn. The store also carries an excellent selection of embellishments, such as tassels and trim, and even has an expert in the field. Her name is Inge Hartley and her specialty is passementerie, which means fancy edging and trimming. She made tie-backs for the living room drapery, which include feathers and beads, as well as the bedroom pillows.

The painter:
Eight years ago, Sean Fittz, owner of SunFish Paint and Design, started a one-man painting business in Boston. Today it has expanded to four of the friendliest, most prompt men you will ever meet—no small feat considering that contractors are considered about as reliable as the cable man. SunFish's professionalism has led to a Boston's Best win, accounts with the likes of Mistral and No. 9 Park, and a wealth of jobs in the Back Bay, Beacon Hill and the South End. Fittz also does color consultations, and not just for the homes that he paints. "Realtors often call upon us to revamp a space," he says. "We have been fortunate enough to work with some of the best designers."

For our model apartment, the key was to smooth out the walls. With time and patience, SunFish achieved an even look using joint compound and plaster. "Every painter's success is based on preparation," Fittz says.

Mopsy

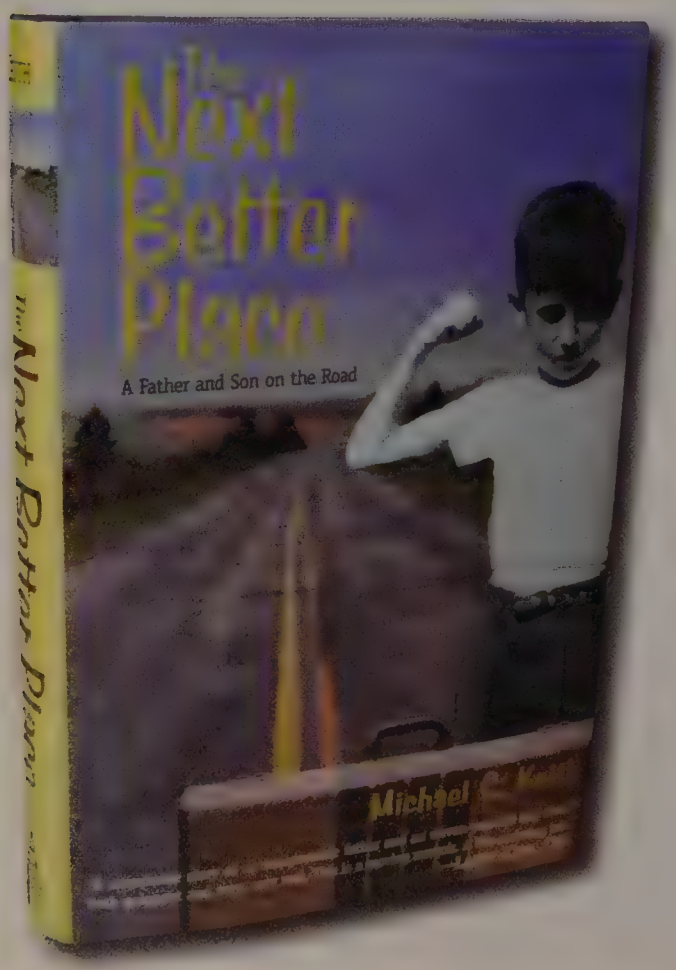
Serendipitous shopping: Our unfettered correspondent seeks out the salubrious and the cerebral.

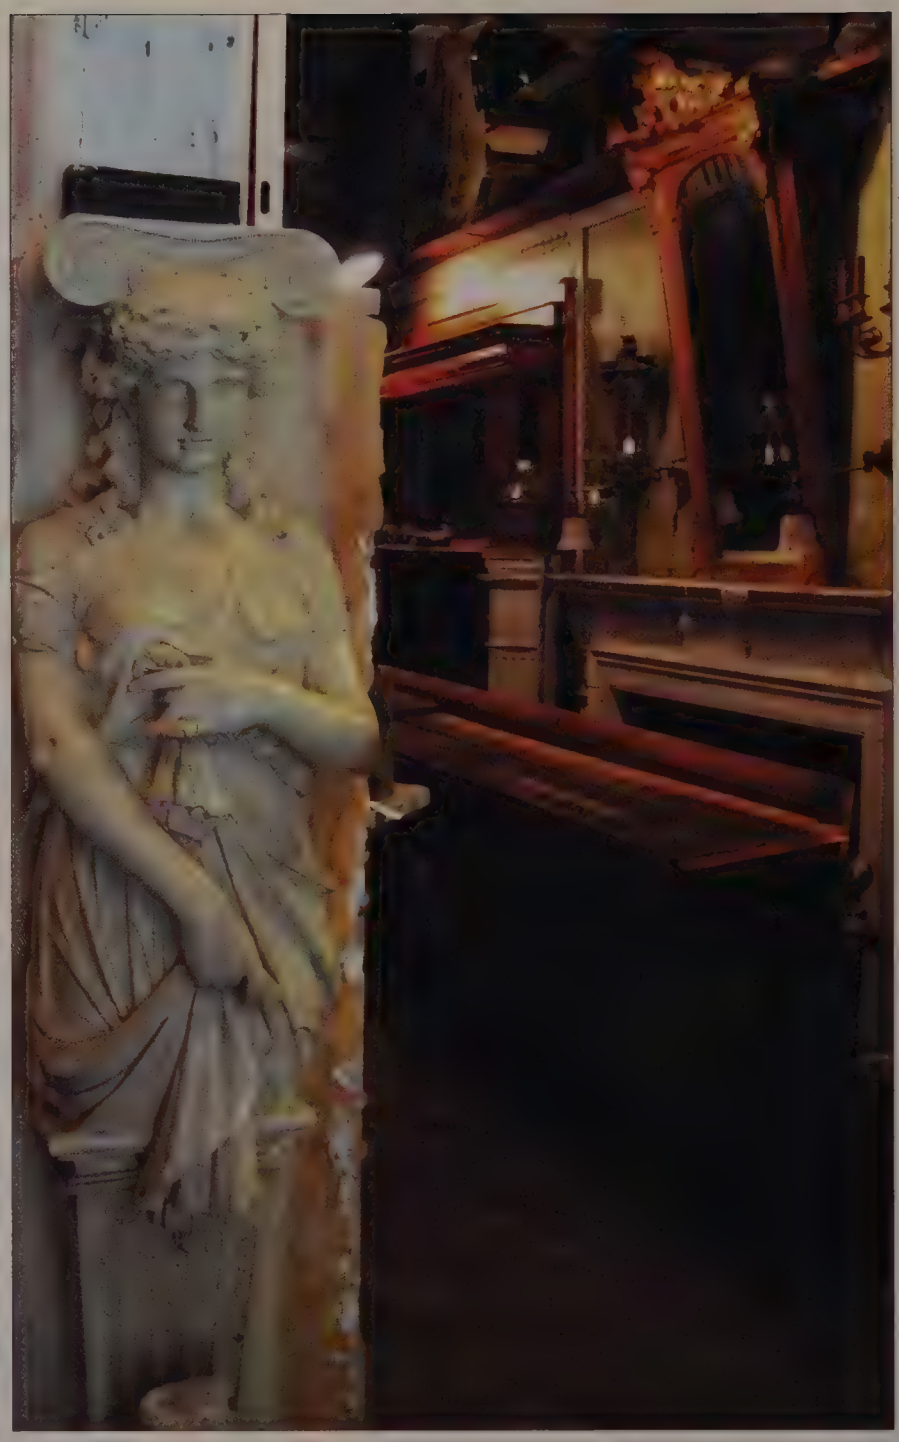
BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

NO SCHOOL, ALL DAY

As a child Michael C. Keith spent two years getting "educated" in a skid-row adventure, hitchhiking cross-country with his dissolute father. Now a Boston College professor of communications, Keith describes that experience in The Next Better Place... a Father and Son on the Road.

In 1959, when he was 11 years old, Michael Keith set off with his father on the open road for two years. He's immature and irresponsible—the Dad, that is—a regular poster father for the department of social services. The son is the more sensitive and competent of the two—and the sober half in a co-dependent relationship with sousing Pop. With California as the Grail, the two hitchhike cross-country, staying at seedy flophouses and church missions, and experiencing adventures of deprivation that young Keith takes in stride. They scrounge work in a Las Vegas casino, a carnival and hotels. Each venue offers a cast of colorful characters who almost seem to seethe up from the Depression, and sexual mischief and abuse of all types find Keith a hapless object or onlooker. The most fascinating person they meet is Ryan, at a Texas boarding house. A dandyish employee at a mortuary, Ryan is full of smart, weird chatter, and he lives in a kind of fairyland of private illusion—a lonely guy on the creepy make. This school of hard knocks, however, had a happy ending for the Ph.D. and Boston College professor.





THE FRUIT OF MANSIONS PAST

Restoration Resources, at 31 Thayer Street, Boston (617-542-3033) sells large construction-related items, salvaged from demolished houses and buildings.

Magnificent outdoor structures—as well as some gigantic indoor pieces—fill this fascinating place. An imposing plaster statue of a lady holding up her skirt folds, (it's reproducible in cement for $800) greets you. Beyond, enormously tall pieces of paneling and pilasters from a library, along with giant doors, eight and a half feet tall, await a new house to absorb their old splendor. Mantels of both wood and marble, which may be merely decorative or put to fiery use, are everywhere here. A silvery copper Art Deco piece, big and haunting, lived its past life adorning the New England Power Building. Enormous curly corbels that gave grace and beauty to big old buildings—Boston City Hospital for one—could bring the same splendor to your garden. Possibilities for recycling ancient magnificence abound here: A thick glass over-the-window arch could be converted into a headboard; a cornerstone could become a substantial bench. Other specialties are beautiful, generous-sized marble sinks and antique lighting fixtures, municipal and mansion-style. Restoration's Walter is known for his work restoring old doorknobs and their workings, including beautiful glass and scalloped bronze pieces.

DECORATIONAL POLTERGEISTS

A Fresh Eye decorates by rearrangement, not addition. It also "restages" houses for sale, making them more attractive. Gift certificates available. Call 617-964-9922. Prices range from $395–$595.

For people who can't afford to hire an interior decorator, or don't want to, here's an alternative: Lift up your existing furniture and discover a whole new room. The refreshingly simple m.o. of A Fresh Eye is to take free rein over a room or two, using and rearranging what you already have. They can borrow from any other room in your house, and they often find forgotten or overlooked treasures in attics—maybe a piece of fabric waits to be draped on an indifferent table, rendering it glamorous. The decorators ask what you can't do without, and inquire into the room's purpose: What's it for and who uses it? De-cluttering is the first step, revealing the "bones," the purity of the room's potential. Then they "float" the furniture into new and interesting conglomerations, creating angles, focal points and cozy chat areas, moving clunky in-the-way items elsewhere. Lamps find their proper level and other adornments that may have become cramped are freshly displayed. All pictures are taken down and repositioned, often at a more intimate height. The "new house" that homeowners find sometimes brings delighted shrieks and even tears of joy.

Table Talk

In Perdix's stead, Ten Tables owner Krista Kranyak has created a fetching eatery with a French accent

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Almost two years ago, a small restaurant by the name of Perdix made its appearance in Jamaica Plain. It served remarkably good food at very reasonable prices in a basic but homey atmosphere. Since then, original owner and chef Tim Partridge has departed, and his former general manager, Krista Kranyak, has brought in a new chef, Tim Wiechmann, and renamed the restaurant Ten Tables. Wiechmann has experience that belies his youth, having spent time at a Michelin-starred restaurant in France and then assisting Michael Leviton at Newton's Lumiere, before moving on to captain the kitchen here.

Wiechmann launches his meals with an amuse gueule, as if to declare that authentic French gastronomy is the new order of the day at this tiny boîte. One recent evening this gratis treat took the form of a small slice of gravalax (salmon cured in salt) wrapped around pear purée, caper and onion. Served on a tiny rectangular white plate, it made a splendid appetite perker. The French ambiance continued with crusty baguettes crafted by Michael Rhodes, baker for Frank McClelland's L'Espalier and Sel de la Terre. Fruity, aromatic extra virgin olive oil rendered the baguettes sublime, but the highest and best use of this superb bread was to mop up the chef's toothsome sauces.

Among Ten Tables' appetizers, Tuscan black kale and rainbow chard with baked Fourme d'Ambert cheese ($10) was a savory treat. Served in a shallow soup bowl, this felicitous combination of tastes and textures delighted the senses, with the creamy saltiness of its mild blue cheese (from Auvergne in central France) merging with the pleasantly bitter chard and kale. Halved green grapes supplied a contrasting touch of fruity sweetness.

The abbreviated—just five items—but varied list of main course offerings included petite Alsace ($20), which captured our imagination as much with its engaging presentation—brought to the table and served in a cast iron pan—as with the full flavor of its ingredients. A selection of pork cuts, including homemade bratwurst, smoked shoulder and pork belly (fresh bacon), shared the pan with roasted apple and cabbage. The bratwurst and bacon tantalized and satisfied, but the pork shoulder could have used longer simmering to make it more tender and achieve greater flavor exchange with the roast cabbage accompaniment. Still, this preparation, Ten Tables' version of choucroute, represented the kind of homey, peasant food that can make a small neighborhood bistro so alluring.

Moving from barnyard to ocean, Wiechmann's seared scallops with roasted fennel and blood orange ($21) constituted a tour de force. Again, the presentation startled in its visual artistry, with the large white scallops arranged in an arc across the plate alternating with slices of blood orange. The crunchy, mildly licorice-flavored roasted fennel added a welcome texture dimension to the dish.

Ten Tables' desserts ($7-$8) included a crème brûlée, rich in flavor and creamy in texture. The method by which the crisp caramelized top was created, however, alarmed us, as we nervously watched the chef's assistant wielding a blowtorch in the open kitchen. The mousse au chocolat pistache, two scoops of thick, luscious, intensely chocolate mousse studded with crunchy pistachios and a garnish of dark chocolate shavings, satisfied our chocolate craving.

While the restaurant's interior appears much the same as when it was Perdix, the owners have added small touches that make it more upscale. For example, framed black-and-white photos of European cities—Bilbao, Florence, Milan and others—have replaced the one lonely picture on the walls of Perdix. Spiegelau wine glasses and substantial cooking and serving vessels represent additional enhancements. White tablecloths covered with the obligatory white butcher paper reinforce the French bistro atmosphere. Square, off-white fabric lampshades on hanging lamps, and a plethora of candles of all sizes complete the décor.

Ten Tables' wine list, our waitress explained, was in flux. I certainly hope so, since it was quite expensive for a small neighborhood eatery, with one of the lowest-priced red wines, Chateau Montus, going for $8 a glass and $30 a bottle. Fortunately, this serviceable 1997 Madiran proved a good exemplar from France's Midi region, with a full body and good acidity making it a fine accompaniment to the food. Less enjoyable was the Macon Chardonnay, which I found heavy, almost in the California style, at the same pricey tariff.

Ten Tables' success will turn on the operation of a basic economic phenomenon elasticity of demand, or the relationship be

New Match for the Fireplace

Chef Jesse Perrin sparks interest; Bill Bradley goes Rustic

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Chef Jesse Perrin is a recent addition to The Fireplace's kitchen.

Every fireplace needs new fuel at some point to stay hot, and so The Fireplace in Brookline has added chef Jesse Perrin to run the kitchen under the direction of chef/owner Jim Solomon. Perrin, whose resume includes opening stints at No. 9 Park and Caffe Umbra, says he'd been "helping out part-time" at Coriander in Sharon when he was tapped by Solomon to fill the position vacated by chef Ben Nathan.

After less than two months of seven-days-a-week work, Perrin seems confident the new job is a good fit. Solomon, he says, "is a hands-off guy, a good guy who lets me do my job." So far, Perrin has been focusing on "building relationships with local farmers, spending time with different purveyors," and preparing to buy his own fish at the Boston fish pier. That way, he'll not only save money but can experiment with "the lesser-known fish," he says. "My favorite is mackerel, but I think people are wary of mackerel, because it's oily." Perhaps he can overcome diners' resistance by offering the lowly mackerel as a special. "I'll marinate it just short of a ceviche with vinegar, to counteract the oiliness, then grill it with hardwood," he says. After all, "grilling is familiar, even if mackerel isn't."

And if diners still won't bite?

"There's room for flexibility," says Perrin, who's also looking into buying whole lambs from a Vermont farm.

SECOND COURSE

When builder Jim Cafarelli took over what was formerly Todd English's Rustic Kitchen, the fate of the Quincy Market eatery was an open question. Would it still be chef-driven, or—horrors!—become a tourists-only destination? Not to worry—the new chef in the Kitchen is Bill Bradley, who first impressed local diners when he opened Bricco in the North End. More recently, Bradley developed an enormously appealing menu during a brief stint at Carmen, the epitome of "cozy, charming North End Italian."

At the new Rustic Kitchen, Bradley's first menu includes homemade pastas and breads, wood-oven pizzas, and oven-roasted entrées such as pancetta-roasted salmon with onions, carrots, braised cabbage and red wine jus. Of special note, the apps and salads section evokes memories of his "tapas-style" offerings at Bricco, with dishes such as baccala fritters with rock shrimp and salsa verde; tuna tartare with pistachio crackers, black radish, roasted beet carpaccio and spicy parsley crème fraiche; and a wild mushroom soup with prosciutto-ricotta fritters and truffle oil. Still to come: a new menu any day now, and a new outdoor coffee bar if the weather ever warms up.

Personnel & Places: Chefs Collaborative, the Boston-based national culinary organization dedicated to sustainable agriculture and environmentally sensible culinary policies, has a new executive director. Betsy Johnson (not the fashion designer, but the former vice president for community gardening and development at the Boston Natural Areas Network) will focus on fundraising, publishing new chefs' guides to serve as culinary industry references, and implementing regional seminars.

Paul Delios, executive chef/owner of Paolo's Trattoria in Charlestown, will bring his Greek-influenced Italian fare to the Italian Culinary Institute in New York City on April 9. To celebrate Theme Night: Rustic Flavors of Italy, Delios will prepare wood-roasted red pepper stuffed with goat cheese, farfalle pasta, pork tenderloin with juniper, and a traditional Greek pastry for dessert.

We Are All Waiters department: Excelsior, the forthcoming Lydia Shire/Tim Lynch extravaganza in the former Biba space, is now set for a May opening. Flux is still under construction at the site of the former Appetito in the South End—at this rate, will there ever be a second restaurant called Re-flux? iB

TASTY TIDBIT

LOCAL FLAVOR

Coffee Cantata in Jamaica Plain has long been the place to go for a great cup of joe. But lately, the über popular coffee shop has expanded its offerings under the ownership of Edith Murnane—serving up such comfort food delicacies as mac 'n' cheese and spicy chili alongside sweeter treats. Now Murnane is hosting a Tuesday Tasting Night one night per month, where local gourmands can submit samples of that night's selected dish—salsa, for example, on March 25—and neighborhood folks will judge the best. The winner of the blind taste test lands a spot on the regular menu. Murnane—a killer cook—prepares her own entry, so let the competition beware. Coffee Cantata, 605 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-522-2223). March 25, 7pm. Future tastings include relish on April 22 and cheesecake on May 20. —J.S.

VARIOUS DATES

Puccini, Puccini, Puccini

Spring's the season to set your emotions free and what better catalyst than a little Puccini? Sensuality, erotic passion, pathos, despair—the Italian composer's operas have got all that and more, and conveniently, some will be staged in Boston in March and April. Set in Rome at the time of Napoleon's advance on the city, Tosca is sung in Italian (with English subtitles) and plays at the Blackman Auditorium March 21-25. It's about overwhelming passion amid the perils of war. On March 22, actress Karyn Levitt, accompanied by pianist Eve Budnick, performs songs by Puccini, Tosti, Respighi and Eric Satie in Puccini and His Contemporaries at the Central Square Branch Library. Finally, La Rondine, at the Shubert Theatre March 26-April 8, tells the story (again, sung in Italian) of a kept woman in search of love. See Performing Arts on page 48 for more information.

MARCH 24-29

Movies: Celluloid Celebration

Since its inception in 1976, the New England Film and Video Festival has expanded into a weeklong program and has become one of the most well-known film and video festivals in the country. This year's festivities, which take place at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, the Brattle Theatre, the Harvard Film Archive and the Museum of Fine Arts, kick off with a party at Soho, the hip new restaurant in Brighton. The fete is followed by screenings at the Coolidge Corner Theater, including the world premiere of Fran Solomita's When Stand Up Stood Out, a film that examines the early days of stand-up comedy in Boston. Several other shorts are also on the bill, including a 25-minute work by local filmmakers Josh Mitchell and Patrick Ryan intriguingly titled Cell Phones & Action Figures. (We hear that a number of bigwig comedians will attend both events: Jonathan Katz, Barry Crimmins, Mike McDonald, Tony V, Jimmy Tingle and Don Gavin.) Tickets are $20 for the reception (which includes a buffet and open bar from 5-6pm) and $10 for the screening. Coolidge Corner Theater, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2501). $60 for a pass to all of the film screenings; $100 includes film screenings and opening- and closing-night receptions. www.bfvf.org.

FRI./MARCH 28–SUN./MARCH 30

Performing Arts: Life Is a Cabaret

Those of you who can recite the words to 1930 German film The Blue Angel (with Marlene Dietrich as the sultry, throaty cabaret singer Lola) are probably already planning to take part in national Cabaret Month. For those who don't know the first thing about cabaret, the Boston Cabaret Festival has enough shows to make you an expert: three nights' worth of satiric sketches, torch songs, transvestitism and more. Opening night, Friday, March 28 (8pm, $12), focuses on established Boston traditions in cabaret, presented by Will & Company in the intimate Blacksmith House at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education. On Saturday, March 29, the festival moves to Lexington's Maxwell Auditorium at the National Heritage Museum for its gala concert, Great American Lyricists (7pm, $35), in which 10 Boston cabaret singers present master lyricists of the great American songbook in a three-hour extravaganza hosted by the festival's producer, Sophia Bilides. The closing night on Sunday (7pm, $35), also held at the Maxwell Auditorium, features performer Amanda McBroom in a solo concert of classic and contemporary cabaret. www.bostoncabaretfestival.com.

WED./MARCH 19–FRI./MARCH 21

Comedy: On the Fringe

Comedian Kim Davis

Legions of would-be wags and card-carrying cutups are well-versed in the humor of Cambridge-based comic Kim Davis, the host and co-founder of the Lizard Lounge's weekly Comedy Hour. Now Davis offers another opportunity for us to yuk it up when he hosts the first Cambridge Fringe Festival, a showcase of artists involved in Cambridge's comedy scene. For the fest, Davis hosts and performs, joining more than 100 local guys and gals who will entertain audiences with stand-up, sketch and improv comedy. Others will screen their funny movies at venues across Cambridge. On March 19 (8pm), head to Cambridge's Comedy Studio for the Tony V Show; on March 20 (8pm), Central Square's Cantab Lounge presents a stand-up show followed by the improv troupe Faces4Radio. Then at 10pm, ImprovBoston Theater hosts the Great & Secret Show—sketch comedy with a Sasquatch theme. March 21 (8pm) is the festival's closing night, at the ImprovBoston Theater. $10 for most events; $15 for a pass to all the shows. www.cambridgefringefest.com.

Music: Streets on Fire

More than the three decades since its inception, hip-hop has truly become a worldwide phenomenon, reaching all corners of the globe and becoming the current lingua franca of international style, sound and image. For evidence of hip-hop's significance, we need look no further than Original Pirate Material, the brilliant debut album by Mike Skinner, better known as the Streets. The pasty-white lad from Birmingham, England, is living proof that it's possible to make one of the best hip-hop records of the year without being from New York, the Left Coast or the Dirty South. Not another rap revisionist out to reinvent hip-hop's wheel, Skinner simply steers hip-hop in a new direction. With a sound more akin to the UK Garage scene (they pronounce it "garridge") than the rap world, the Streets' beats are atypical—sparse, lopsided and off-kilter, often accented by lush, movie score–style string arrangements. But the Streets' brilliance lies in the way his deceptively laconic vocals lie over the tracks, his monotone delivery making one wonder what Gang Starr might have sounded like if Boston's native guru had grown up on the other side of the Atlantic. Skinner's loping, sincere stanzas about the everyday life of an everyday bloke become more and more appealing with every listen. March 20, 9pm. $15. Paradise Rock Club, 967 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-562-8800).

CityScope: Oscar Wild

On Oscar night, what fun is it to ogle all the glitterati tottering down the red carpet in four-inch heels—to rank on Björk's outfit or JLo's hairstyle—all by your lonesome? Not much, so here are a few places where you can get a big bag of buttered popcorn and a giant Coke and settle in with a hundred other armchair critics for a night of catcalls and squeals of delight. A low-key option is at the Brattle Theatre (leave the glam gown home). They'll show the Oscars on the big screen and offer light refreshments and a cash bar. If you're in the mood to dress up, the Ellie Fund hosts Oscar Night America, a festive gathering in 1920s style, with martinis, hors d'oeuvres and live music at the Rack. Also, the Massachusetts Film Bureau hosts the Big Fat Awards Gala at the Four Seasons Hotel. Neal McDonough, star of NBC's Boomtown, will serve as auctioneer (bid on a walk-on role on Crossing Jordan), and film critic Richard Roeper (of Ebert & Roeper) will provide live commentary from the red carpet in Los Angeles. See CityScope on page 46 for more information.

Tastings: Turning the Tables

As if you need an excuse to go to Saint other than to enjoy its swank setting in the former Cafe Budapest or to feast on Rene Michelena's extra-ordinary cuisine—this new nitery, as its promoters have dubbed it, hosts the first in a series of celebrity-chef events March 24. Turn the Tables will showcase seven signature mini-courses inspired by Michelena's guest chefs—an impressive sextet that includes Drew Nieporent of New York's Tribeca Grill, Nobu and Montrachet; Mark Allen of Le Soir; Ana Sortun of Oleana; Seth and Angela Raynor of the Pearl on Nantucket; and Amanda Lydon of UpStairs on the Square. All this for a mere $75. 90 Exeter St., Boston (617-236-1134). March 24, 7pm. $75.

Music: Looney Tunes

ZuZu's interpretation of March madness is to dub the club Theremin Madness month. Friday nights are turned over to Jonnie Spaceman (nee Jon Bernhardt), theremin master, host of WMBR's Breakfast of Champions radio show, and member of local rock groups the Lothars and the Pee Wee Fist. Spaceman gets to show off his theremin tremolo while playing host to a rotating roster of accompanying musicians. March 21 features an unlikely combination of theremin and punk/new wave hits of the '70s and '80s with guests Clint Conley (Mission of Burma, Consonant), Winston Braman (Fuzzy, Consonant, Count-Me-Outs), Hilken Mancini (Fuzzy, Count-Me-Outs) and Jef Czekaj (Tardy, Anchormen, Sinkcharmer). March 28 is a theremin-infused improvisational evening with Jake Trussell (DJ C, Electro Organic Sound System, Tiger Saw and Cul De Sac) on turntables. 474 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-864-3278). 11:30pm, no cover.

CityScope: A Springboard

Why stroll, saunter or even jog into spring when you can swing into the season (literally)? The second annual Night of Swing Dancing and Wine Dinner at the Boston Harbor Hotel invites you to put on your zoot suit, learn the lindy and boogie to the swanky tunes of the Love Dogs. Chef Daniel Bruce prepares a three-course gourmet meal paired with wine; in between courses, you can learn some swing moves and watch dance demonstrations. Swing-dancing neophytes are encouraged to attend. Boston Harbor Hotel, Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-439-7000). www.bhh.com. March 22, 7-10pm. $125.

MON./MARCH 31–TUE./APRIL 1

Music: A Little R&R

We first heard of the band Rusted Root when a Penn State pal played their CD 24/7 during a car-camping trip in the mountains of West Virginia. From the first song—"Send Me on My Way"—we were hooked. Few songs inspire such unbridled passion for life. Rusted Root's energetic, largely acoustic jams have been compared to Phish, the Grateful Dead and Santana—or, in the words of one reviewer, "imagine the Gypsy Kings as hippies from Pittsburgh." The six-member band fuses African and Caribbean rhythms with Indian vocals and inspired lyrics, resulting in an upbeat, happy-go-lucky, earthy, trippy sound. Makes you just want to throw off your shoes, close your eyes and frolic barefoot in the grass. But the dance floor at Avalon, where Rusted Root plays March 31 and April 1, will have to do in the meantime. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-423-NEXT).

Hope, Hardship

The Huntington Theatre Co. delves into the underworld of gang violence and abuse

Making gang violence, abuse and imprisonment the ingredients of an uplifting story is no small task. But playwright Kia Corthron manages to incorporate both hardship and hope into Breath, Boom, playing at the Huntington Theatre this month.

The work follows an African-American girl named Prix from her role as the leader of a gang of girls at age 16, to her life beyond the realms of violence at age 30. Gang involvement is just part of the story—Prix's roller coaster life includes abuse by her father and neglect by her mother, as well as time in prison. But director Michael John Garcés says that as Prix begins to understand the effects of the violence she has both experienced and inflicted upon others, her evolution from self-destruction toward survival will be felt by all. The audience, he says, will leave the production "with the sense that in the long run, everybody finds some sense of worth in their life, and something to aspire to. At the end of the play, this woman is going to try to go on."

Garcés doesn't expect the play to appeal to every audience. Reactions, he predicts, will "be really mixed, and some people are not going to want to deal with this world at all." But Garcés is nonetheless optimistic that many theater-goers will embrace the journey. "It's hard on the audience, but also exciting," he says. Huntington Theatre Company, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-0800). www.huntingtontheatre.org. Tue. and Thu., 7:30pm; Wed., 2pm; Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 2 and 7pm. Through April 6. $14-$64. —Bridget Behling

BASIC BLAH

There's no pulp in Travolta and Jackson's new fiction

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Rock 'n' roll legend David St. Hubbins truly gave us words to live by when he said in This Is Spinal Tap "It's a fine line between stupid and clever." The line isn't all that fine in Basic, but rarely has a movie acted so clever while being as stupid as this one is, particularly during its totally unconvincing, annoyingly smug and utterly mystifying twist ending. (I also have never seen a group of reviewers walk out of a screening as confused over a movie's resolution as after Basic's muddled ending.)

The best thing you can say about this thriller, in which John Travolta plays a detective investigating a crime at a military base, is that it's better than the last movie with that premise, the truly sleazy The General's Daughter. In this flashback-filled tale, Travolta plays New Orleans DEA agent Tom Hardy, who's asked by an old Army ranger buddy (Timothy Daly) to come to a nearby base and investigate the murder of a hard-nosed drill sergeant (Samuel L. Jackson) during a training exercise gone wrong.

John Travolta, Connie Nielsen and Brian Van Holt star in the new military thriller Basic.

Because the training exercise resulted in the deaths of most of the unit, Hardy's old buddy wants to clear up what happened before outside investigators arrive. Hardy has one day to unravel the mystery. He has one survivor who won't talk (Brian Van Holt), another who's in the hospital (Giovanni Ribisi) and the help of the base's inexperienced military investigator (Connie Nielsen).

Not surprisingly, the two survivors offer vastly different accounts of what took place on the training exercise, which, like just about everything here, happens in the rain or in the din of falling raindrops. As they open up to Hardy, who always seems to know what buttons to push in these soldiers, we see flashbacks of Jackson's stern taskmaster tormenting his trainees, and of what happened during the exercise in which members of his unit ended up firing on each other, and at their hated sarge.

The varying accounts initially make Basic seem like an updated Rashomon. If only. The movie doesn't have the patience or internal logic for that (and it certainly can't touch Auto Focus, Adaptation or Confessions of a Dangerous Mind as an entertaining exploration of subjective truth). Instead, Basic just becomes more annoying. The flashbacks that replay the same scene in a rain forest hut—each time a different way—become more cartoonish and less interesting, and the "revelations" less credible (even the ones you can see coming). Meanwhile, John "I remade Rollerball" McTiernan's direction is downright cheesy, with some of the hospital scenes shot out of focus and the sound effects mixed so high during the flashbacks that you literally cannot understand much of the dialogue.

Which leaves the bone-headed twist ending. I can only guess at what it means, but apparently it's supposed to make most everyone who was involved in the training brouhaha—and then tried to manipulate their way out of it—into a good guy. It works about as well as the Saturday Night Fever sequel.

But that's no surprise, considering James Vanderbilt's screenplay piles one twist upon another with machine-like regularity, but without much genuine impact. Nearly everything is a red herring that means zilch, so it's no wonder you end up caring about nothing. The idea behind a twist, especially one of these last-minute megatwists, should be to make an audience say "aha" with realization that the pieces have all come together. This worked in The Sixth Sense, Memento and The Others, but there's no such shared joy in Basic.

The ironic thing about Basic is that its most important phrase of dialogue is "Tell the story right," something the film itself is unable to do. Worse movies than Basic come out just about every week. But it will be some time before another one so misguided hits our screens. iB

Basic ★½

Directed by John McTiernan. Written by James Vanderbilt. With John Travolta, Samuel L. Jackson, Connie Nielsen, Brian Van Holt, Giovanni Ribisi, Taye Diggs and Timothy Daly. Rated R. Columbia Pictures.

New Releases

All the Real Girls ★★★
If you thought movie romance had nothing to do with real life anymore, think again. David Gordon Green's tale of the fits-and-starts relationship of two small-town lovers (Zooey Deschanel, Paul Schneider) is down-to-earth and free of formula. With its dreamy blend of pastoral beauty and harsh industry, the North Carolina mill town where they come together and apart feels part of a world where people fall in love and unwittingly hurt each other and nurse broken hearts and try to figure out what to do next. The natural performance of Deschanel (Almost Famous, The New Guy) in her first leading role is terrific. (At Kendall Square.)

Amandla!: A Revolution in Four-Part Harmony ★★★
After all those weak 1990s Hollywood dramas set in South Africa (like Bopha! and Cry Freedom), this documentary about the role of song in South Africa's blacks' civil rights struggle finally gets it right. Lee Hirsch's film is a mix of music, anecdote and political history that's full of insight as well as human joy and suffering. It bogs down a bit in its second half, but this is down-to-earth, living history. (At Harvard Square.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a late Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of this lusty, laugh-filled spoof of the Roaring Twenties, in which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was a great career move, Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jail and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the up-scale shyster with all the answers. All three know just how to manipulate truth, justice and the American way through performance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
The title refers to the Rio de Janeiro slum where the action takes place, as God-forsaken a place as you'll ever find. But the movie is as rich as its setting is impoverished. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets and Amores Perros, as its stories stories criss-cross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to somehow get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash that you just can't stop watching. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Cradle 2 the Grave ★★
There's 2 many characters, 2 little character development and 2 much rehash in Romeo Must Die director Andrzej Bartkowiak's action thriller, which teams one star (Jet Li) and one co-star (DMX) of his earlier movie. Defining moment: Li's big martial arts showdown with the villain takes place within a circle of flames, just like the climax of Romeo. 2 bad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Daredevil ★★
Riddle me this, comic-book moviewatchers. What's the point of meticulously establishing the hows and whys of a person being blinded by chemicals, gaining superhuman powers and becoming a crimefighter, if then practically all the other main characters have superpowers too—but without the trial and tribulation? Kinda kills most of the drama. That's part of the problem with this Marvel adaptation cut from the same troubled-hero cloth as Batman and Spider-Man. That and the split personality that has the story concentrating on character drama one minute, then shoving a generic, video-like sports training montage at us the next. In trying to be everything to everybody, the movie ends up being practically nothing. As the love interest with a few moves of her own, Jennifer Garner steals the show, though. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Guys ★★★
The first movie to directly deal with the Sept. 11 attacks has an appealing simplicity. It's based on the experiences of writer Anne Nelson, who helped a New York fire captain write the eulogies of several men who died in the World Trade Center. Sigourney Weaver plays the writer here, and Anthony LaPaglia the fire fighter. Most of the movie is just the two of them, with the first asking the second about the dead men he worked with. These scenes are somber yet moving, and never over-the-top. If the movie overreaches emotionally, it's in the scenes of Weaver's character writing at her laptop later on, which seem overwrought, compared with the more effective scenes with LaPaglia. (Opens March 28.)

Laurel Canyon ★★
If I were a director and had the chance to trade up Ally Sheedy for Frances McDormand, I'd do it in a flash. But I don't know if I'd practically remake my Sheedy movie with McDormand in it. Here, Lisa Cholodenko rehashes much of the plot of her indie hit High Art, in which a naive young woman enters the bohemian circle of an older woman (Sheedy's character). In the writer-director's first film since, the young woman is Kate Beckinsale's post-grad med student, who finds more appeal in her fiancé's free-spirited record-producer mom (McDormand) than in finishing her dissertation after she and the fiancé (Christian Bale) move out west and temporarily bunk with the mother. The retread factor mingles with movie cliches like the doctor who's great at sorting out everyone's life but his own and the parent-child relationship in which the child is the responsible one. McDormand's typically rich performance is the lone bright spot. (At Kendall Square.)

The Life of David Gale ★★

This Texas-set thriller might have been a lot more thrilling with a little less of director Alan Parker's over-the-top treatment. The setup is strong enough to keep the first half involving, with Kate Winslet as an investigative print journalist who's given access to the title character (Kevin Spacey), a former professor and anti-death-penalty activist now on death row for a murder he claims he did not commit. Winslet does well playing an American here, and Spacey does his usual smart-and-smug stuff, but as the movie builds toward its climax it becomes more and more an excuse for Parker's overwrought theatrics. The reactions of Winslet's character become too overemotional for a woman whose hardened objectivity is her main trait (that's the point, but Parker can't pull off her transition), and Parker's maneuvering of the story so that he can stage an opera scene is self-indulgent and just plain silly. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Max ★★★

Writer-director Menno Meyjes offers bracing speculative drama in his story set in Munich following World War I. The title character is Max Rothman (John Cusack), a fictional Jewish art dealer who's embraced the period's modern art. He befriends another war veteran, an aspiring artist—and, it turns out, emerging fascist—named Adolf Hitler (Noah Taylor). Terrifically acted by the two leads and full of crisp dialogue, the movie engagingly addresses the relationship between creative expression, happiness and politics. It also offers the intriguing theory that Hitler might not have turned to extreme politics had he succeeded at art. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

Old School ★★½

The laughs are a little spotty, but it's refreshing to see a "rowdy comedy" that's full of genuine characters, and not just male and female caricatures. Luke Wilson, Vince Vaughn and Will Ferrell are the three buddies in a personal and professional downward spiral who end up becoming big old men on campus when one moves back into their old college's neighborhood and they end up starting a new fraternity. The three stars all get their laughs, the supporting cast is colorful (from Andy Dick to Craig Kilborn) and the movie never pretends to be more than dumb fun. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Safety of Objects ★★

Rose (Go Fish) Troche's latest starts like a whiny, Lifetime cable knockoff of American Beauty. Somehow, by the time it's over it's given us a child abduction, a shooting and a mercy killing. But unfortunately, its trip from Point A to Point Z isn't all that thrilling, thanks to its haphazard comedy-drama and its boatload of standard-issue discontented suburbanites. Among them are a lawyer (Dermot Mulroney) who suddenly feels empty when passed over for a partnership, a middle-aged wife and mom (Mary Kay Place) who feels sexually estranged from her husband, and a matriarch (Glenn Close) grieving over her long-comatose son (Joshua Jackson). The film wants to show how we let little things like egos and resentments distract our attention from the big things in life, but it's so overwhelmed by the "big things" in its story that it fails to flesh out its relationships. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Shanghai Knights ★★★

Jackie Chan and Owen Wilson's latest in the Shanghai Noon series is another successor to the Bob Hope and Bing Crosby Road movies. The comedy material is old-school schtick, yet the chemistry between the stars is the real show. This time, the 1880s buddies travel to London to find the sneering aristocrat (Aidan Gillen) who killed Chan's father. They're aided by his high-kicking sister (Fann Wong) as they fight malice in the palace. The movie starts slowly and self-consciously uses 1960s British Invasion songs for the 1880s London action, but Chan and Wilson's camaraderie and the frenetic martial arts scenes make it almost as much fun as its predecessor. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Spider ★★½

David Cronenberg has made plenty of weird and wonderful movies, from Scanners to Naked Lunch. But his latest is only weird and so-so. He dives into the human psyche again in this London-set story of a mental patient (Ralph Fiennes) who reflects on his childhood through flashbacks in which he's an unseen observer of his doting mother (Miranda Richardson), pub-crawling father (Gabriel Byrne) and his Oedipal 10-year-old self (Bradley Hall). Patrick McGrath's script, based on his novel, visually likens our memories to jigsaw puzzles or spider webs composed of countless, joined pieces—but after getting increasingly involving, the film disappointingly culminates in a resolution that merely says "crazy is as crazy does." (At Coolidge Corner Theatre.)

Spun ★

Phony "edginess," over-the-top performances, indulgent style—in other words, this story of L.A. speed freaks is indie hell. (Opens March 28.)

Mitch (Luke Wilson) and Frank (Will Ferrell) have an encounter with Dean Pritchard (Jeremy Piven), who is scheming to close their fraternity in Old School.

KENTUCKY-GROWN

Sam Bush continues to stretch beyond his bluegrass roots to find his historic place in music

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Sam Bush relates to Forrest Gump, casually finding himself in historic situations, only with a mandolin or fiddle in his hands.

Take Bush's three Grammy Awards. The latest was for playing on the 2002 Record of the Year, the soundtrack to the film O Brother, Where Art Thou? The others were for Best Country Vocal Group Performance with Emmylou Harris' Nash Ramblers, a band he played with for five years, and Best Pop Instrumental for a track off the Bela Fleck & the Flecktones album Live Art.

"My wife says, 'He Forrest Gumped his way into that one,'" says Bush, who has also recorded with Lyle Lovett, Garth Brooks, Trisha Yearwood and Steve Earle during his journey through a country/bluegrass world that sometimes crosses into the mainstream, as the O Brother soundtrack did.

"It just upped the awareness for a lot of people who played acoustic music," he says of that Grammy-winning soundtrack.

But of course Bush would never have been on that O Brother CD or worked with Fleck (who joined Bush's New Grass Revival for nine years through the '80s) or Harris if it wasn't for his reputation as a virtuoso instrumentalist.

Sam Bush puts his own spin on bluegrass—his band includes a drummer but no banjo player.

Now he's exploring his own voice with the Sam Bush Band, which is bound to touch on jazz, rock, gospel, reggae, pop and country when it hits the Somerville Theatre March 30.

"This is not a bluegrass band per se—right off the bat, we have a drummer and we don't have a banjo player," Bush says of his group, which includes upright/electric bassist Byron House, drummer Chris Brown and guitarist Brad Davis. "It goes back to the days when I was starting up New Grass Revival. Old-timers would come up to us and say, 'That's not bluegrass,' and we'd go, 'Yeah, we know.' Even when we had bluegrass instrumentation [in that quartet], I never felt we were a strict bluegrass band. But certainly the influence was there."

"If anyone wants to call me a bluegrass musician, I feel flattered," says Bush, 50. "Bluegrass is as technically challenging as any other kind of music I've ever played, although it comes natural to me."

Maybe it helps to grow up in rural Kentucky, just 55 miles north of Nashville, with a father who played mandolin and fiddle. "My parents were farm people," Bush says, "but my dad, once he saw that I had musical abilities, he very much encouraged me to get off the farm and play music."

"I had the advantage of watching Nashville television," he adds by phone from a studio in that Tennessee capital, where his band is working on a new CD. "I had no idea of the education I was getting at the time. It was as if I had my own homespun videos to watch the musicians' fingers work. I used to get to see [mandolin icon] Bill Monroe on TV, never realizing that people on the West Coast never saw him."

Bush began playing mandolin at age 11, then took up the fiddle at age 13, and won national championships on the latter instrument at ages 15, 16 and 17. He encountered listeners who didn't believe he was only 17 when he made his recording debut with a band called Poor Richard's Almanac. "When we started sending [the record] around, they didn't believe the kid from Kentucky had played on it," he says.

In addition to mandolin and fiddle, Bush also plays guitar, going back to his years fronting high-school rock bands through the late '60s. "If I wanted to play with people my own age, it was in rock bands," he says, "and then, when I played bluegrass with people, I was always way younger than everybody else. Now I'm always older than everybody else!"

The age of Bush's audiences still varies from venue to venue, though he sees a lot of the college-age jam-band crowd that follows his buddy Fleck, whose Flecktones hit the Orpheum April 9. "It really helps to have a young audience," Bush says. "Some people, when they get to be a certain age, they just don't want to go out."

Some older fans catch up with Bush at gatherings like Colorado's Telluride Bluegrass Festival, where he will play his 29th consecutive year in June, and where he recorded his recent live disc Ice Caps: Peaks of Telluride.

"The first time we went there, it was like we found a bunch of people just like us," says Bush, who remains a discovery for some. "There are still people out there who are going to hear us for the first time, and I love a first impression." iB

Tale of an Accidental Pop Band

Chance and kismet conspire to form Elcodrive

When Elcodrive became a band, it was news to Mike Golarz. Now the band's lead singer and guitarist, the former Something Ira frontman had made some home recordings for fun with guitarist Mike Courcy of the popular Boston-area band Bob's Day Off. Neither was looking to join, let alone start, a new outfit. But one day Golarz got a call from Scott Riebling, Letters to Cleo bassist and a touted local producer. As Golarz recalls it, "Scott said, 'I like the new band.' I said, 'What new band?' There's a lot of Scott involved with Elcodrive. He got involved and said, 'This band is going to be a band.'" The lineup is filled out by drummer Bill Bassett and bassist Tom Smith, both former members of Bob's Day Off.

Riebling, who had worked separately with Something Ira and Bob's Day Off, brought Elcodrive to the attention of Boston-based label XOFF Records. XOFF signed the band shortly after hearing their self-produced demo. With only a handful of bands on the label, XOFF acts as a finishing school of sorts for local acts that have what it takes to break on a national scale. The band, rife with infectious pop potential but still in its infancy, and the label, which has the time and resources to properly develop a fledgling act, seemed a perfect pairing.

Nearly a year and a half has passed since Riebling coaxed the members of Elcodrive together. Now the band is amassing a following in New England and packing clubs in Southern Massachusetts, where the band members currently live. Recently their single "Tonight" placed second out of more than 7,000 entries in the Pop/Top 40 category of the International Songwriting Competition, earning Elcodrive a slot on a forthcoming compilation. Elcodrive's debut album, Somewhere Between Now and Then, arrived in local record stores at the end of February. Produced and engineered by Riebling, it's a solid collection of no-frills pop tunes strewn with careening hooks and memorable choruses—the type of radio-friendly anthems that will likely inspire many a shower crooner.

After a whirlwind year of writing, recording, rehearsing, and performing, the band members only recently had the opportunity to take a step back and view their creation in its entirety. Golarz recalls the moment when it truly sank in that the band was, well, a band. "We were in the van on our way up to Boston and listened to the album for the first time, front to back. We looked at each other and said, 'Hey, that's pretty good.' The hard work paid off. Even if it doesn't do anything, I'm proud of it." *March 28, Paradise Rock Club, 967 Comm. Slow Mo

DJ Brynmore chills out

DJ Brynmore presides over the new Slow Mo night, Wednesdays at Orleans.

In recent years, Somerville's Davis Square has quietly blossomed into a hip Red Line hangout, home to a number of funky eateries, earthy coffee shops and crowded Irish bars featuring live music. With the addition of Slow Mo at Orleans, an upscale restaurant and bar offering a just-trendy-enough late-night lounge atmosphere, Davis now offers a weekly downtempo music night. Starting at 9pm every Wednesday, Slow Mo will showcase the pioneering, laid-back sound of DJ Brynmore.

As resident DJ at the Central Square hotspot the Enormous Room, Brynmore has earned a reputation as one of Boston's premier downtempo musical selectors. He's spent more than six years behind the decks, developing a delicate and talented touch. From dub, jungle and trip-hop, to eclectic ethnic beats, Brynmore mixes a wide range of styles into a lazy and chic lounge vibe.

Growing numbers of dance music enthusiasts have rushed to embrace the burgeoning downtempo and chill-out genre over the past year, even as many large dance clubs have struggled to fill their dancefloors. Slow Mo organizer (and occasional guest DJ) Craig Kapilow explains: "I think that the shift toward downtempo and chill-out indicates that the superclub idea might have lost a bit of its cool. A lot of people who have been supporting the underground dance scene for years have gotten older, and they probably are not as inclined to go out to a large nightclub." Whatever reasons lie behind the shifting tide away from strictly dancefloor rhythms, downtempo artists like Brynmore have found themselves in the right place at the right time.

Orleans provides a perfect Slow Mo setting, offering plush couches for relaxing and conversing, a good selection of libations, and appetizers that are a notch above the French fries and buffalo wings found in many other Davis Square nightspots. If you're in the neighborhood, stop by for a cool drink and some chilled-out music—you just may hear the future sound of Somerville. —Daniel Spurling

Tickets are $40 at the door (if available) Please call 617-859-1400 ext. 323 for more information and to purchase tickets in advance for $35

100% of the proceeds from this event will be donated to The Leslie's Links Ewings Sarcoma Fund at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. For more info e-mail wendy@lesliеslinks.com.

LESLIE'S LINKS was founded in 1999 by Leslie Semonian who battled cancer and passed away in December of 1999 at the age of 32. During the eight and a half year period of her illness, until her death, Leslie never allowed cancer to stand in the way of her goal of helping others. She knew how precious life was and energetically embraced each day. She helped others to appreciate their own lives more. She wanted to be remembered as a participant in life, not an observer. Her passion was boundless, and will continue in the hearts of the many friends and people whom she inspired.

Leslie's Links is a fund at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute which raises money for Ewings Sarcoma Cancer Research in various ways. One of which is through the Leslie's Links bike team associated with the 192-mile Pan-Mass Challenge bike-a-thon from Sturbridge to Provincetown. Leslie's Links has raised over half a million dollars since its inception in 1999.

Improper Impersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity). Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Fairy Princess

You: the fairy princess who rolled in to buy a lock. Me: the bike mechanic who was entranced the moment he saw you. I asked you to lunch, then dinner. You know the rest. You are my everything. Can't wait to do breakfast again. I love you, Poopaloopa.
—CBJ

Looking for Lo

It was a snowy night, Feb. 17, the Harvard Square T-Stop. Before I even set eyes upon you, your voice was upon me like a siren's call. I quickened my step and there you were, singing your heart out and playing your guitar, your dark tresses obscuring your joyful, mysterious eyes. Your smile was every bit as sultry as your voice. Transfixed as I was, I let countless trains go by as I tried to work up the nerve to approach you. At one point you stopped to tie back your hair, and I thought, now is my chance. But then you got up for a cigarette, leaving your guitar case and my nervous, brooding romanticism behind. I took one of the cassettes, Lo Hardcastle Unplugged, from your for-sale pile (don't worry, I paid for it), and rejoiced at at least knowing your name. I considered climbing into your guitar case in the hopes that you would take me home. I resolved to wait for you and declare my affection, but as the hour grew later and you didn't return, I despairingly got on the train and have been listening to your music and thinking of you ever since. I wanted to call you, but apparently your number is unlisted or you're not from Boston. Won't you write me and give us a chance to make sweet music together?

Hobart Lacrosse

Nov. 15 at Whiskey Park: I caught you glancing in my direction a few times. Later, as I was leaving the ladies' room, there you were waiting for me at the bottom of the stairs. What a nice surprise! We chatted for a bit before I had to excuse myself to rejoin my friends. Ever since that night I've been hoping to run into you but I've had no luck. Here are the clues I'm left with: You are a tall, blond, 30-ish, former Hobart lacrosse player from Greenwich, Conn., now living in Brookline. I'd really love to see you again!

Checking You Out

For some strange reason, I had the urge to write in to Improper Impersonals after I saw you at the Johnny Foodmaster's in Somerville (on Broadway) on Feb. 25 around 7pm. We passed each other a few times in the aisles, making eye contact. The first time I saw you, I had a puzzled/confused look on my face because I had just seen a man shoplift a bottle of salad dressing. You are cute, with great blue eyes and curly brown hair. You wore a faded baseball hat and a thin green windbreaker jacket. I was in the same checkout line as you, a few people behind you, and you saw me again. I was wearing a gray wool hat, a fuzzy green jacket, and I have blue eyes and long reddish-brown hair. You looked very familiar to me and I was hoping that you'd wait outside for me. If this sounds like you (and you're single and not psycho), drop me an e-mail sometime.
—checkoutline@hotmail.com

Calling Dr. Ring

Dr. Ring, I can't stop thinking about you. You don't wear a ring so I am taking this chance to find out if you're single. I was one of your patients (petite blonde who slipped on the ice in January). Don't worry, I'm not stalking you, just hoping that now that I am all better we could go beyond the doctor/patient relationship to something more fun. I hope you e-mail me!
— yourfavpatient@hotmail.com

Joe the Hockey Player

At 7am, on a Friday in February you cut me in line at the check-in at Logan Airport. I was pissed. You were with your buddies. Then I recognized you from the picture published in THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN as one of the 20 hottest singles in Boston. You were the professional hockey player. I was still pissed. Then I thought you were cute and figured "OK, he can cut me." You glanced at me a couple of times but seemed busy with your friends. Perhaps you noticed me? Me: petite blonde, with a green flower bag, wearing jeans, peacoat, and Burberry scarf. I was headed to Miami, just like you, but I was not going to the All-Star game. I am back in Boston now, and if you did indeed notice me and are interested in meeting me, I'd be up for that—even if you are a hockey player.

No Game

I just got off of work and made my way down to the Broadway stairs, into the dank tunnel that smelled like a musty boxing gym. Two seconds later, a gorgeous girl walked by, white puffy coat with a hood, off-white pants, carrying a small red leather purse. You had the most beautiful brown hair and face. You looked like an angel amidst the snow. I was wearing a black jacket, jeans, soaked white sneakers and a Patriots hat. We went all the way from Broadway to Northeastern and got off at the same stop. We made eye contact several times, but due to the fact that I have no "game" to speak of, I dared not open my mouth and blurt out something stupid. I walked toward Our House, you walked toward west campus. I wish I took a chance. Do you live in the area? I'd love to warm up together over coffee sometime. Drop me a line.

Waiting for a Cab on Valentine's Day

I was standing with a friend in fron of Burger King on Huntington Ave., trying to catch a cab in the bitter cold on the night of Valentine's Day You walked up, holding what looked like your supper. You tried to get in cab that was there, until my friend informed you that there was an "Eskimo" in the backseat. I asked i you were going downtown, thinking that we could all share a cab. You said that you were going home to Jl and that you had to let your dog m as soon as you got home. You gave me a cigarette while we were waiting. I feel bad because I only smoked half of it before a cab came. If it wasn't absolutely freezing out, I would have liked to talk to you more. If you'd like to resume our conversation, maybe this time indoors, e-mail me.

T-Schizzy, My Traveling Companion...

It was Feb. 7, one of many blizzard-like days here in Boston. We met at Logan, and we shared in the frustration and disappointment tha all flights had been cancelled. Stranded and both desperate to get to New York, we were soon devising plan to get there. Your warm eyes and friendly smile made me feel th I could trust you as my traveling companion. Before long, we were ir a cab together bound for South Station. The journey to New York wa long, and I may have missed my chance for musical stardom, but it was quite memorable. During our seven-hour train ride, we shared a few beers and laughs, and talked about music, our fellow passenger cheese plates, low-cut shirts and t unique and entertaining quality of the Impersonals. I hope that you'll take me up on my offer to have a "Lucky" night in Boston sometime.

Rockie Horoscope

MARCH 19 – APRIL 1, 2003

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

ARIES MARCH 20-APRIL 19

The full moon on the 18th signals the beginning of the end of whatever tried out for your attention when the month began. Its conclusion may not be signed, sealed and delivered, but the mental and physical energy you've exerted has already had a significant effect. You don't have to push any harder. You also won't have to tackle a new problem until the ries new moon on April 1, so take a break at the equinox. Celebrate being a Ram in the year of the Ram. Incidentally, you're especially lucky s March ends.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

ake advantage. While your sociable Venus ruler avels through your Aquarius midheaven, you're in an xcellent position to attract the people and situation iat'll advance your career. The reputation of someone your family may also benefit from this annual ansit, which, unfortunately, will be over on the 27th. ay special attention to traditional values and the ell-established person proposing them on the 20th. e or she could be your reward for making an ntelligent financial decision.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

he Virgo full moon may be tricky, particularly for Twins orn close to the Cancer cusp. Pressure from two eparate sources, for example, your boss and a family ember, can squeeze whatever high spirits you've anaged to maintain right out of you. But this, too, hall pass, probably shortly after spring arrives and you ear the words you've been waiting for. For some, the essage will inspire a spiritual calling; for others, it's ermission to let their artistic imagination loose. By onth's end, everyone feels re-energized and rewarded.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

uring this full moon-spring equinox week, sensitive loon Children know it's time they do something about e direction their life has taken. Do you want to ontinue in the same vein? If not, what goal do you spire to next? You can be quite critical yet somewhat nrealistic about the possibilities—travel for some, raduate school for others, more art and music for all. st be aware that your imagination may take you laces you won't be able to get to after responsibility-den Saturn enters your sign in June.

LEO

nce spring arrives, Leos can't wait to shed their intery woes and heavy clothes. While you'll welcome at extra hour of light, you'll really appreciate the dvantages you'll have when your sun ruler is favored by cky Jupiter as March ends and the lion goes out like a mb. Make plans now to enjoy the benefits about to be estowed on you, also to maximize the inside formation (strictly legal) you get about other people's oney. Not only is the immediate future brightening up r you, but for partners and friends too.

VIRGO

he Virgo-Pisces full moon can bring to a head your elings about a significant other, as well as what ost concerns you about yourself. It's time to stop eighing the alternatives or waiting for something to appen that'll take the decision out of your hands. But efore you beat yourself up for not acting sooner, be ure you wait a few days and factor in what you'll arn when your Mercury ruler and the Aries sun merge n the 21st. That piece of the puzzle could have a ajor impact.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

he equinox would be an appropriate time to reset your riorities and get your life back in balance. Too much of ne thing, too little of another can throw a Libra for a loop. But once self-directed Aries energy takes hold and folks rouse themselves out of hibernation, it'll be easier to establish yourself. You'll also get support from productive Saturn while it favors your artistic Venus ruler. Even though Aries lights up your marriage house, your independence need not be compromised.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Whether it suits your purpose or not, this week gears shift of their own accord. Make the most of each idealized, romanticized moment you can experience during this full-moon period. Be sure to include your friends, even the whiny, judgmental Virgos, in the fun. Changes in your domestic life will go down more smoothly now that Uranus is in Pisces, a compatible water sign. However, you may feel slightly disoriented when your Pluto co-ruler turns retrograde on the 22nd.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Better hope it is all talk and no action while Mercury challenges Pluto in your sign just before St. Patrick's Day. Your partner is also due for a tongue-lashing then, so don't expect any help from that quarter. This full moon puts additional pressure on all the mutable folks—the Sags, Geminis, Pisces and Virgos—you hang with. Commiserate with them, but for heartfelt emotional relief and a few chuckles, go to Leo or Aries. They'll also come through when your Jupiter ruler and the Aries sun trine on the 28th.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Equinox and solstice points strike a chord in the Goat that resonates beyond our (in other words, non-cardinal signs) hearing. So at the moment that spring arrives (8 pm EST) on the 20th, listen up. There's a message being sent only you (maybe, Aries, Libra and Cancer too) can decipher. One of your better days follows: On Friday, your Saturn ruler is graced by all the affection and pleasure Venus can bestow. Usually, their rewarding trine occurs only twice a year, so make the most of the occasion. Buy a big-ticket item, enjoy the arts, fall in love.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

A money matter might dampen your St. Patty's Day spirit simply because the full moon is casting a shadow across your financial axis. It'll probably be resolved before the new moon on April 1; still, don't neglect to pay attention, or whatever else is called for. There's a good chance your partner will be enormously helpful, especially when the sun favors generous Jupiter in your Leo marriage house on the 28th. Same goes for folks involved in legal matters. That's a red-letter day for Aquarius. Dress up.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

"Conclusion" is hardly the word for what is happening to you guys. What comes after "the end" yet before "the beginning?" So, if you feel you're in between, waiting for the pain and/or relief of letting go to fade, yet uncertain (as if you are ever sure of anything) what's coming up next, relax. The times, especially for Fish, are changin.' The full moon in your Virgo marriage house, across your "me-we" axis, only adds to the feeling that adaptation and mobility are key to your successful survival.

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

Cheryl and Jim Powers brazenly flout the usage rules for Sandals pool toys (see small print at right) in Negril, Jamaica.

Shirley Hamara toted an IMPROPER all the way to Easter Island. The famous statues were erected some 1,500 years ago by the Easter Island Tourism Council.

Carey and Maria Dunfey discover cover boy Lou Merloni in Fort Myers, Fla.

Jay Cormier sends greetings from Red Hook Harbor in St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands. We're certainly glad that we're not in St. Thomas. It looks stressful and unpleasant there.

Richard Stephens and Matt Petersen sip brews after assaulting Wachusett's North Face. OK, that's actually the Eiger North Face, in Switzerland.

Kevin Scannell prays to the ancient Japanese god Pow Pow at the Kenmeiji Shinto shrine at the base of the Nozawa Onsen ski area in Japan. He says that glades skiing there is very safe, as the all trees are bonsais.

THE ONLY THING MISSING WAS MARLON PERKINS...

Desperate times call for desperate measures, which explains the gala Adopt-A-Pet Dinner and Auction held at the Copley Plaza to benefit the Franklin Park Zoo.

Models in bodypaint depicting endangered species greeted guests as they arrived in the grand ballroom, where a four-course African game dinner of gazelle, impala, eland and dik-dik was served.

"If the food's this good in Africa," wondered one guest, "why is everybody over there starving?"

Among the attendees who didn't allow the little PETA protest out front to ruin an otherwise perfectly civilized evening: guest of honor and former president of Zambia, Kenneth Kaunde; food conglomerate Todd English; globetrotting adventurer Linda Schwabe; bestselling author and stockbroker-to-the-stars John Spooner and his stunning wife, Susan; über-philanthropists Hod and Cassandra Irvine; Newbury Street fashion avatars Alan and Be Bilzerian; Pops maestro Keith Lockhart; Pulitzer Prize–winning historian David McCullough and kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman, who won the raffle prize of a full-length mink.

After dinner, Karen Keane of Skinner Auctioneers started the bidding for rare and exotic animals from the zoo's own collection.

Movie mogul Peter Farrelly went home with a seven-foot Burmese python named Oz, while Channel 7 anchor Randy Price now has to think about building an addition onto his house in Maine to accommodate the two ostriches and herd of zebra that he won.

The evening's biggest spender, however, was car dealer Ernie Boch, who bought a pair of lions and a bull elephant that he said, "will go great with the llamas on the lawn of my house in Edgartown."

DIAL 9-1-1 FOR THE FASHION POLICE...

To raise money for construction of its super-futuristic building planned for the South Boston waterfront, the Institute of Contemporary Art held an old-fashioned charity fair, complete with snow cones and sick-making carnival rides, in the lobby of the Boston Design Center.

Board member and celebrity hairstylist Mario Russo manned the weight-guessing booth, while Mayor Menino worked the crowd in a Spongebob Squarepants costume and food writers Corby Kummer and Alison Arnett hosted the pie-eating contest.

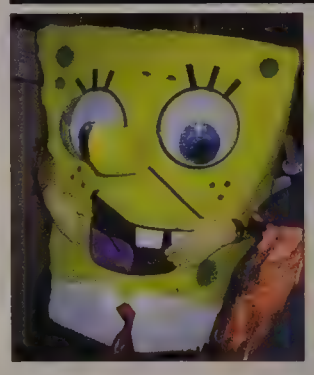
Summing the evening up, one guest sniffed, "I haven't seen this much gingham since the road show of Oklahoma," to which someone else replied, "If I'd only known, I would've worn a tablecloth."



At the ICA benefit at the Design Center: Mario Russo, Michael Schlow and Bryan Rafanelli; Mayor Menino as Spongebob Squarepants.

BROTHER, CAN YOU SPARE A DIME?

Anyone whose 401(k) shrank in the past year—i.e., anyone with a 401(k)— can relate to feeling poorer than everyone they know, which explains the premise behind the Have-and-Have-Not Ball, held in the newly refurbished ballroom of the old Ritz.

A benefit for the Back Bay–Beacon Hill Nanny Relief Fund, it attracted such philanthropic young couples as Karen and Kevin Lamb; Rachael and Andy Goldfarb; Pascal and Irina Aguirre de Navarre; Wendy and Chip Pierce; John and Trevania Henderson; Tom and Jennifer Donaldson-Janes; Molly and Stephens Dunne; Emily and Peter Webster; Jim and Meg Gordon; Joel and Randi Cutler; and David and Nina Fialkow.

At the Have-and-Have-Not Ball, clockwise from upper left: Andy and Rachael Goldfarb; Jane Dudley and Trevania Henderson; Frank and Malachy McCourt; Meg and Jim Gordon.

During the cocktail hour, guests were asked to anonymously jot down the small economies they've been forced to make since the economy tanked. Following a four-course all–foie gras dinner (accompanied by copious quantities of Krug), the winning entries were chosen by celebrity judge and Angela's Ashes author Frank McCourt and his tale-telling brother, Malachy.

Third place went to the couple who pretended to be out of town during the Louis sale but scoured Filene's Basement every day for the next month looking for leftovers.

Second place went to the woman who covered up for cutting back on trips to her colorist by telling friends that the look she was going for was Colombian pop sensation Shakira meets Cruella de Ville.

And the grand prize—a week's stay with someone else's in-laws in Palm Beach—went to the couple who admitted that they actually contemplated not using a decorator to re-do their house on Nantucket.

WE'VE SEEN THE FUTURE AND WE'RE STAYING PUT...

It was a strictly hush-hush, exclusive affair when reclusive New Hampshire billionaire Dean Kamen threw a Sinners Party at Saint to unveil his latest invention.

Billed as "a device guaranteed to transform human life," it looked like nothing more than a motorized skateboard, but guests "oohed" and "aahed" appreciatively as a scantily clad model demonstrated it by riding around the dance floor of the beyond-chic subterranean night spot. Although the invitation specified "costumes optional," such prominent worthies as Governor Mitt Romney, House Speaker Tom Finneran and U.S. Sen. Teddy Kennedy came dressed as Pol Pot, Stalin and George W. Bush, respectively. There were also several Cardinal Bernard Laws, a few Hugh Hefners, and a Marquis de Sade or two, but the pièce de résistance was the drag queen impersonating Linda Lovelace, who handed out party favors in the form of marital aids like vibrators, Viagra tablets and ben wa balls.

"This is one slammin' party," said yogi Baron Baptiste, ordering a round of tequila shots from a waitress whom, he noted, "must have a magnificent downward dog."

Oh, and by the way: April Fools. IB

CONFUSING ISSUE NO. 1

I enjoyed your take on how a number of local Irish establishments offer their version of breakfast ("Irish O'Breakfast," March 5), whether the bangers, pudding and fried eggs are served up at The Green Briar, Kinvara, or my favorite, The Irish Embassy. But one small correction: Irish Football is not soccer, "as we Americans call it," at least not the variety touched on in your article that states the season runs from "March to September." That game is in fact Gaelic Football; the rules, as such, are explained here: www.gaa.ie.

That being said, the Republic of Ireland does retain its own football (i.e., "soccer") league that runs from midsummer through the winter. Just something to make note of.

—Evan Whitney
Brighton

CONFUSING ISSUE NO. 2

Thank you for providing such a wonderful resource and reference tool to the city and its visitors every two weeks. I reach for my copy of the Improper at least 100 times a week. As a concierge I often receive requests for something a little different than what may be offered in regular visitor guides. I find your listings very accurate and informative. The purpose of this message is to praise you and point out that in your listing under "Sights to See" it reads Old Faneuil Hall, which it is (old)—however, the name is simply Faneuil Hall.

—David J. Sargent
Chef Concierge
Millennium Bostonian Hotel at Faneuil Hall Marketplace

Editors' Note: Technically you're right about Faneuil Hall. When we say Old Faneuil Hall, we're referring to the historic 1762 building with the grasshopper weather vane on top, and we're attempting to distinguish that historic building from the whole area—bordered by Haymarket, Government Center, the waterfront and the Financial District—which is also commonly referred to as Faneuil Hall.

If your friends say "We're going to Faneuil Hall to drink scorpion bowls," you know they don't intend to sip giant bowls of liquor in the building that John Adams dubbed "the Cradle of Liberty." They're going to the Hong Kong and they'll probably know it in the morning.

To avoid confusion, let's all call the historic building that deserves our respect Old Faneuil Hall from now on. Who's with us?

FURNALD GRAY PHOTOGRAPHY

Boston-based photography duo Kim Furnald and Tim Gray shoot fashion and portraits for clients around the country. Currently working out of their sunny loft in the heart of the Seaport District, Kim and Tim's photographs have appeared in a variety of publications, including Darwin, CIO, New Age and The Advocate. In this photo, taken in Germany last summer, they're enjoying the day off from shooting for a cosmetics company. Their work can be seen in "Beauty Booty" on page 30, "Beauty Editor's Picks" on page 32 or online at www.furnaldgray.com.

FROM THE EDITOR

VANITY FAIR

Though I sometimes wish it were otherwise, I'm not one of those impeccably groomed women who arrives at work each day with makeup perfectly applied, hair styled and nails painted. That's mostly because I like to sleep, and time spent blow-drying or applying products is time I'd rather spend snoozing. So, generally, I rush off to work damp-haired and barefaced, hoping I don't run into anyone I know en route.

At some point during the workday, however, I pull out a mirror and my cosmetic bag. And I do make an effort for evenings out. In fact, despite my less than vigilant approach to beauty, I'm as fascinated by beauty products as the next woman, ever questing for the perfect shade of lipstick or the magic lotion that will defrizz my unruly hair.

Working for a magazine that covers fashion and beauty means there are always new products around the office to ogle or try. The desk of our fashion and beauty editor, Samantha House, is like a mini salon, filled with eye shadows, nail polish, potions for hair and skin, soaps of every kind, etc. To attract a crowd of female staff members, all she has to do is pull open a tantalizingly product-crammed drawer—sort of the siren song of the office.

Think of Samantha's desk as a metaphor for this, our annual beauty issue. These pages are filled with her expert advice and information on beauty products—both new and tried-and-true—the latest hair and makeup styles for spring, and beauty and spa services from facials to body wraps.

For all you men whose medicine cabinets contain little more than a family-sized pack of Irish Spring, a can of shaving cream and some rust rings, there's info in here for you too—shaving tips, advice on haircuts and skin care and more.

Happy grooming!

WILL THE REAL SPONGE-BOB PLEASE STAND UP?

Several of our readers pointed out that it was not Mayor Menino, but Peter Nelson of the Wine Bottega in the North End wearing the SpongeBob costume in a photo that ran in the March 19 Last Scene Here column. "I am baffled at the obvious failure to fact-check this story," and "SpongeBob was not Mayor Menino," were two such sentiments that we received in e-mails from indignant readers. It's interesting that while many sharp readers picked up on the SpongeBob issue, they failed to note columnist Jonathan Soroff's final words ("April Fools"), and nobody wrote to say that car dealer Ernie Boch did not buy a pair of lions and an elephant at an auction to raise money for the Franklin Park Zoo, one of the column's other spurious assertions.—The Editors

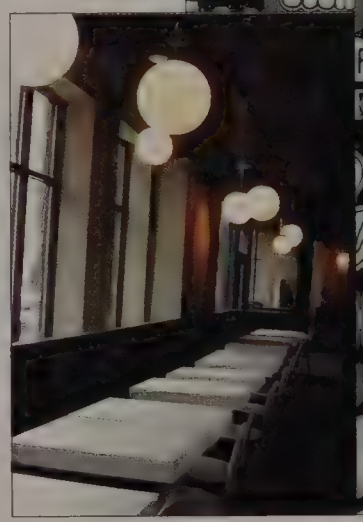
NEW IN TOWN

The Joy of Flux

To hear Stephen Labuda describe his new restaurant Flux (which opened at the end of March) is to imagine Henry David Thoreau as a regular customer. "The basic thrust of Flux is that we wanted to open the simplest, most inexpensive restaurant that we could," says Labuda, who is himself simplifying the staffing by serving as both chef and general manager.



All appetizers cost $5 and the most expensive entrée tops out at $12 at this restaurant located in the site of the former Appetito in the South End. In keeping with Labuda's philosophy of "celebrating simplicity," the food is classic American and the décor is based on utilitarian laminate and chunky formica tabletops. Both the menu, which will change regularly, and the seasonal color schemes (paper menus, cocktail straws, napkins and the like, shifting from spring fuschia to summer green) support the restaurant's name and concept. Flux will, however, keep regular hours: dinner seven days a week and brunch on Sunday. One Appleton St., Boston (617-695-3589).—Carolyn Faye Fox

Return of Red Square

•Local mega-club Avalon recently began distributing a limited number of VIP membership cards to a select Saturday night crowd. The VIP membership offer has been extended initially to subscribers of the Avalon electronic mailing list. Cardholders are entitled to monthly members-only engagements, including special events, open bar receptions and celebrity meet-and-greet parties.

•If you've been wondering what songs are ruling the airwaves in Moscow these days, you might want to check out the Red Square Russian Lounge on Saturday nights at Level. After a month-long hiatus, Red Square is back, with DJ Albertik spinning the latest in Russian pop and dance. —Daniel Spurling

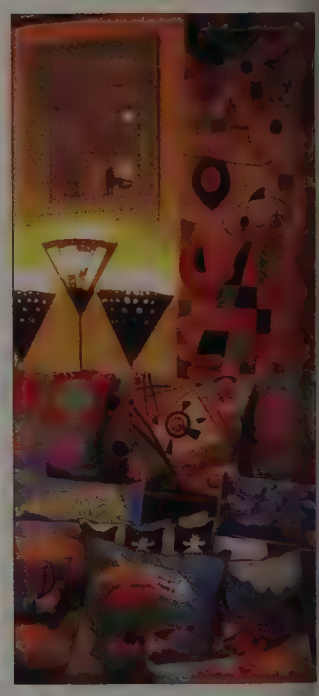
Glazing Over



Finally, a store where you and your mom can shop together. Monroe Salt Works, a new home goods store slated to open in the Westin Copley Place April 1, is an unlikely cross between a quaint (but upscale) country store you'd find on a Maine back road and the ultra-trendy Urban Outfitters. Can't quite picture it? There's the aroma of pine when you first step foot into Monroe's cozy, cabin-like surroundings. Then there's row upon row of salt glaze stonewear with images of roosters, ducks, moose, frogs and crows painted on the plates, bowls and platters—not to mention linen tablecloths ornamented with black bears. The Urban Outfitters flair shines through in the funky candles; stylish bags; prismatic, embroidered pillows; kitschy toys and beauty products from companies like Burt's Bees and Dirty Girl. Yes, there are even flamingos for your lawn. Most of the goods come from the original Monroe Salt Works, which started as a one-man operation in an old chicken barn in central Maine. Now there are six stores—four in Maine, one in Arlington, Mass., and this one in Boston. Westin Copley Place, 10 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-236-0045).—E.H. and J.S.

TIDBITS AND MORSELS

A New Passport

Merci pour le chocolate... They say eating chocolate has the same effect on the brain as falling in love. So if you've been looking for love in all the wrong places, Sandrine's is offering a substitute. The Holyoke Street bistro now offers a chocolate and pastry bar (watch out Le Meridien) to accompany its Sunday brunch. Pastry chef Lee Napoli's chocolate confections include fondue, choux puff chocolate religieuse and chocolate Grand Marnier gateau, to name a few. The brunch and sweet bar begin April 13 and the $30 price tag includes a brunch entrée and dessert. 11:30am-2:30pm. 8 Holyoke St., Cambridge (617-497-5300).

New Deli... Kenmore Square's Heritage Café opened in early March with a mission: to bring the authentic taste of the Big Apple's renowned delis to Boston. Co-owners Damian Tysdal and Scott Thatcher set up shop in the space formerly occupied by J-Square Restaurant. They serve soups, salads and sandwiches made with the brand of cold cut ubiquitous in New York: Boar's Head. Thatcher says he hopes to be "the place to get sandwiches in the same way that Kelly's is the icon of roast beef." We'll see if a couple of guys from Maine and Indiana can live up to the NYC hype. 636 Beacon St., Boston (617-369-9400).

City Slickers... Diners willing to go the extra mile for quality grub can put their cars in drive for two new suburban draws. Ambrosia on Huntington's Tony Ambrose threw open the doors of his latest endeavor, Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar, in Hingham March 27. Executive chef Steven Cassevoy's hearty menu boasts a beefy selection plus sashimi and the raw bar. Also on the outskirts of Boston is Lexington's Copacafe Grand Cafe & Bar, which opened in February under the ownership of George Howell, mastermind of Boston's much-missed beanery, Coffee Connection; his wife Laurie; Henry Patterson of Bel Canto; and baker extraordinaire Vicki Lee Boyajian. The concept is small plates—many served dim sum style on carts—plus coffee and wine. General manager John Mascia, co-owner of Bomboa, says, "It's amazing how it's taken off here. Every night there's a line out the door." Blackfin, 1217, Main St., Hingham (781-740-4000). Copacafe, 1727 Mass. Ave., Lexington Center (781-862-6622).

Europe to Go... If you've read Fast Food Nation, you most likely now have second thoughts about grabbing a Super Value Meal. Cambridge's Passport: A Taste of Europe opened early this year as a quick and fresh alternative to junky fast food. Creator Roland Czekelius, a former executive chef at the Park Plaza Hotel, incorporates top-shelf European ingredients into a menu that includes rotisserie chicken, lamb and pork dishes, paninis, pastas and Nicoise salads, all costing about $7. Think a combination of Au Bon Pain and Marché. Two more Passport locations are slated to open in Plymouth and Chelsea in the spring. 70 Pacific St., Cambridge (617-577-0000). —E.H., J.I. and J.S.

INTERVIEW

Personal Business

Local matchmaking guru Susan Fox has been playing cupid since 1992 at her local personal ad agency, Personals Work. Using flowery language and celebrity comparisons (while staying within the realm of honesty), she and her staffers create personal ads for those in need. Then they help clients find a suitable publication for their ad—for $125 an hour (not including the price of the ad). Fox answered a few questions about her unusual career.

IB: How did you get started in the business?

SF: I met my husband through a personal ad, which I wrote, and I was helping place personals for other people. We figured out that we were on to something.

IB: How many clients do you have?

SF: Hundreds. We get referrals from people's friends, hairdressers, personal trainers.

IB: What's your success rate?

SF: More than 50 percent of our clients meet with success, which is defined as meeting their goals: marriage or a serious long-term relationship.

IB: What's the typical Boston client?

SF: Most of our clients are women—about 70 percent. They range in age from pretty young to up into their 70s. We think it's fun to work with the older ones because when we started, women over 40 were being told that there was no chance for them.

IB: How does the process work?

SF: If they're out of state, we require a photograph. If it's someone we meet with face-to-face, we give them homework. We poll their friends, children and mothers to really get a consensus about them. They give us phrases that people who know them would use to describe them. We also ask them to tell us what their real strengths are that they bring to a relationship.

IB: What is the most common celebrity that people try to describe themselves as?

SF: For one woman we said "Winona Ryder without the kleptomania." I've had people who say they think they look like Gwyneth Paltrow, and I'm like, "In your dreams, honey!" Maybe she has the long blond hair, but that's about it.

IB: How much do you have to exaggerate?

SF: It's really about putting the best foot forward. It is advertising—that's why they're called personal ads. You gotta sell the sizzle, not just the steak. We try to be really evocative. We have a client who looks like Edie Falco. Now, maybe not everyone wants to look like her but it brings an image to people's minds, so we'd say "Edie Falco on a good day." Personals Work (617-547-6862). Sfox@latoile.com.—Jessica Iredale

Farewell Lou

Orange You on Alert?... The forces seem to be conspiring against the FleetCenter lately. The Bruins and Celtics are hitting the skids with scant time left in their seasons. The latest Big Dig development, the opening of the northbound Liberty/Tip O'Neill Tunnel of Contention, has eliminated the arena's direct Causeway Street exit. And the war with Iraq has jacked up the national security level to orange, prompting FleetCenter CEO Richard Krezwick to advise fans to arrive an hour before game time. What can be done to entice the masses to overcome these hurdles and come root for the boys? A 25-cent draft night might be a good start.

Cinderella Story... Do you like golf? Do you like the North Shore? Well then, you're sure to love North Shore Golf magazine. The new mag will be published four times a year during golf season, and offers interviews, course reviews and other North Shore golf news. It's free wherever you tee off, thus allowing you to put your money toward other North Shore golf expenses, like a house by the Ipswich Country Club.

A Good One Gets Taken... Maybe it's like the Sports Illustrated jinx for bachelors, but as soon as we go and put Red Sox jack-of-all-trades and single guy Lou Merloni on the cover of our Bachelor/Bachelorette issue, they release him and he ends up with the Padres. Judging by the number of special requests we got for the issue from Boston-area women who had been unable to get a copy on the streets, there's plenty of heartbreak among the city's bachelorettes at Lou's parting. We wish him luck with his new team, and we hear San Diego's not a bad place to be single, either...—Ezra Dyer

SAM SAYS

Shoe Biz

Camper manager Chris Barakat

Camper, a 28-year-old Spanish shoe company, has finally made its way to Boston, and it's worth checking out. The reason: Camper shoes are specifically designed for walking, with the soles specially curved to properly channel the energy and movement of the feet while you stroll down, say, the Plaza España—or even Newbury Street. They're among the most comfortable shoes you'll ever put on your feet. But Camper's designs are wonderfully unique as well, with campy images of sushi or fields of flowers printed on the sandal straps or the top of the shoe. One of the company's more unique concepts is its "Twins" line: shoes in a pair feature complementary designs rather than match exactly. Try these on for size. 139B Newbury St., Boston (617-267-4554).—Samantha House

Men's Club No More... After 207 years in business, Shreve, Crump & Low inaugurated its first woman president and CEO in March. Merritt Mayher is the material girl of the moment. She left her 11-year association with the imperial Tiffany & Co. to hold court as the 10th president of Shreve's. Luxury retail is in her genes—her mother was a vice president of Saks Fifth Avenue Boston. We'll see if Mayher rules the house with an iron, or maybe a platinum, fist.

Tuning In... Boston talk radio may be slanted toward sports and politics, but there's now a forum for women to sound off on issues pertaining to the fairer sex. ChickChat, a nationally syndicated show out of Washington, D.C., was picked up by WBPS-AM 890 last month and airs weekdays from 2-3pm. The show's hosts, Lara Dyan, Heidi Hanzel and Jacy Cowgill, talk about work, men, marriage and sex—and not necessarily in that order. On April 3, the show hosts Boston College sophomore Anna Schleelein, who discuss the sex column she writes for The Heights student newspaper. Another Bostonian makes a guest appearance April 11, when Diane Darling, president of Effective Networking, shares networking tips.

Step on the Gas... Speed Dating, HurryDate, 8minuteDating—clearly singles are eager to pair up—and fast. Allow us to introduce Accel-o-Date, the latest addition to the time-crunch dating phenom. The New England–based dating service launched March 11, and much like its counterparts, it offers singles between the ages of 21 and 60 the opportunity to meet a mate. Participants talk for five minutes before moving on to the next date—up to 25 times. If two people make a match, they're alerted the next day via e-mail. It's $25 (or $30 on the day of). Upcoming events are April 22 at 711 Boylston, and a free session April 29 at The Modern. www.accelodate.com.

Fade into Spring... Though our urban landscape is a far cry from the bucolic pastures of the farm, spring shearing season is upon us nonetheless. One local salon is offering a discount to style winter locks into suitable spring fashion—Marcel of Newbury's Ecocentrix salon will give IMPROPER readers a 20 percent discount on all hair treatments in April. Just let him know you read about the deal in this issue. Ecocentrix, 30 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-2222).

Boston Story?... We all know how the typical drive through Boston can be...the melodic sound of honking, gazing at birds (not the kind that fly), dodging pedestrians and maneuvering through the Big Dig. But an unforeseen element surprised an IMPROPER staffer this past St. Patty's Day as she was driving up Mass. Ave. toward the Harvard Bridge. A construction sign that usually flashes a simple traffic advisory blinked that phrase followed by the words "Wank It." Further exploration found a similar construction sign on the Cambridge side blinking another traffic advisory followed by the words "Nerd Crossing" and surrounded by shutterbugs capturing the phenomenon on film. By the next day, the irreverent messages had disappeared. Puzzled and highly amused, we asked the City of Boston Transportation Department and MassHighway, but neither could shed light on the subject. So who's the highway prankster? Maybe an MIT hacker tampered with the system. But we like to think along the lines of L.A. Story and believe that the signs have taken on a mind of their own. —E.H., J.I. and J.S.

Behind the Words

How one writer made it to the top—and then fell

In today's episode of VH1's Behind the Words, we chronicle the career of writer Ezra Dyer, from the early days of struggle to the height of prominence, the eventual tragic flame-out and subsequent return to an even keel. It is a story like no other.

Ezra Dyer grew up in Maine on the wrong side of the tracks. And they weren't even train tracks. They were raccoon tracks. There was no cable TV in Jefferson, and Dyer was forced to read "books." The other children made fun of his name, calling him Azrael—Gargamel's cat on The Smurfs—and Lezra. He vowed that one day they would no longer taunt him. One day, he would legally change his name to Mike.

CORY DOOGAN, CLASSMATE: "Azreal was a wicked friggin losah. His parents' truck weren't even jacked up or nothin'... Cory Jr., you get away from that!" (Doogan throws empty can of Schlitz at a barefoot child attempting to start a rusty chainsaw in front of the family's pop-up camper.)

Dyer was in high-school when he discovered a sure-fire way to avoid falling into an endless cycle of poverty, desperation and alcoholism: He would become a writer. (Cut to a five-minute commercial for the Swiffer.)

In college, Dyer grew disillusioned with the North American way of life and became an expatriate, living in London for an entire semester. This period obviously informs many of his later works, particularly Bloody Hell Old Chap, There's Custard on My Trousers.

After graduation Dyer moved to Boston. The next few years proved tumultuous: First his cable company was Cablevision, then it turned into AT&T, then it became ComCast. All of them would make devastating, empty promises about upgrading to digital. Still, he persevered, constantly chasing his dream of becoming a write star. (Commercial break for the Bowflex machine.)

EZRA'S MOTHER: "Lord knows why, but I was a source of writing material in those early years. Sure, I once constructed ear splints out of tampons in an attempt to get a puppy's ears to stand up straight, but what's funny about a puppy running around with tampons strapped to his head?"

After writing a column for several years, Dyer moved to L.A. and became syndicated in more than 500 RMV scrolling electronic text displays. He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2006, when a Korean translation of his column caused Kim Jong Il to laugh so hard that he renounced Communism. Dyer was easily the most famous and important nonfiction writer in human history, coming within a Tom Bergeron cancellation of appearing on the third season of I'm a Celebrity: Get Me out of Here!

BARRY CUDGEL, ACCOUNTANT: "By the time he came out with the 30-volume Encyclopedia Buttanica, in which he made fun of everything in the whole world, he was pulling down more money than I could keep track of. I don't know what the precise number was, but suffice it to say he was making thousands of dollars every year."

But success would have a high price. (Cut to commercial for local home furniture store where a man with a mustache touts "wicked pissah deals on these friggin' dinette sets.")

In 2009, Dyer's drug habit became public when he lit himself on fire freebasing Pixy Stix in a Bellagio restroom. The media subsequently uncovered his gambling addiction, tax evasion, illegitimate children and hatred of the media. Fans who had a sense that he'd been "mailing it in" turned out to be absolutely right: His column was mailed in from Cambodia, where it was produced in one of that country's many uncomfortably warmshops. Which are a little nicer than sweatshops, but still.

BURT EMDASH, EDITOR: "I wondered why he'd been submitting his column scrawled on defective Nike insoles. His stuff had been so good lately, though, that I didn't bother him about it."

After losing his job and getting beat up by Pauly Shore in a nightclub brawl, it seemed that Dyer was down and out for good. Coming up: The part where we see what he's up to now. (Commercial that was witty and novel at its Super Bowl debut but that you're now really sick of.)

EZRA DYER: "For a while there, things were so bad that I contemplated moving to Detroit. I owe a lot to the people who staff the Don't Move to Detroit Hotline, I'll tell you that. But eventually I came to terms with the fact that no matter how successful I became as a writer, I would never be as rich and famous as Anna Nicole Smith. And that's OK."

ANNA NICOLE SMITH-DYER: "C'mere, honey, and give mama a kiss." iB

Soroff/On

Art Buchwald

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Syndicated humor columnist Art Buchwald's work appears in newspapers in nearly every major city in the world. Born in Queens, N.Y., he and his sisters were raised in a series of foster homes after their mother became unable to care for them, and he began working at the age of nine. As a teenager, he joined the Marine Corps and served with distinction in World War II. After attending the University of Southern California, he moved to Paris, where he lived for 14 years and began his career in journalism as a feature columnist for the Paris Herald Tribune. In 1962, he returned to the United States and settled in Washington, D.C. A recipient of the Pulitzer Prize for Distinguished Commentary and a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, he has written 30 books—including his latest, the collection We'll Laugh Again—and his popular political satire column appears in more than 500 newspapers worldwide. He spends his summers on Martha's Vineyard, and on April 6 he will serve as the keynote speaker at the 15th annual Literary Lights gala to benefit the Boston Public Library.

Jonathan Soroff: How do you stay funny week after week for 50 years?
Art Buchwald: It's just the way I think. I've always thought funny.
JS: Does everyone expect you to be witty all the time?
AB. Yes, and I say to hell with 'em.
JS: Do you crack yourself up writing your column?
AB: Yes, I do.
JS: So you sit there all day laughing and get paid for it?
AB: Well, not all day, but I laugh when I write a good line.
JS: And then you get paid for it.
AB: It's pretty good.
JS: Your take on the running joke in the White House?
AB: Well, they make for very good copy and they make me money. I can't get too mad at them. They feed me.
JS: How about Dubya?
AB: He's pretty funny.
JS: Any sacred cows, anything you won't make fun of?
AB: I'd certainly be very leery of taking on the military when they're over there fighting. I was a Marine, and I'm very sympathetic to those guys. But I still have to write about Ashcroft and other people who are screwing up our lives.
JS: Funniest person you've ever known?
AB: de Gaulle.
JS: {Laughing.} Charles de Gaulle was a real card?
AB: No. But he amused me. Lyndon Johnson was funny, too.
JS: Funniest president you ever knew?
AB: Oh, for me, Nixon.
JS: Because he was such good material?
AB: Yeah. I only think about myself.
JS: You had a pretty tough childhood. Do you think humor is a coping mechanism?
AB: Yeah. It's a defense. And I've used it all my life because of the way I grew up, but I got lucky and made it into a living.
JS: Most ridiculous aspect of American society today?
AB: The war.

"THERE'S NO SUCH THING AS WRITER'S BLOCK AT A NEWSPAPER. THEY WON'T LET YOU HAVE IT. YOU SAY TO YOUR EDITOR, "I HAVE WRITER'S BLOCK," HE SAYS, "GET THE HELL OUTTA MY OFFICE."

JS: Current pet peeve?
AB: The war.
JS: Where is it easier to get good Chinese food, Boston or Washington?
AB: I don't think either place is that good.
JS: Strangest letter your column ever provoked?
AB: I'd written an article suggesting that we put all our nuclear waste in Cleveland, because they wouldn't notice anyway. I get a letter. All it says is, "F--- you—The citizens of Cleveland."
JS: Ever get too close to the high and mighty to skewer them properly?
AB: No. I don't get that close. And I have a certain advantage. A senator once said to me, "You have a license to say what you want, because you do it with humor, so you're not going to be a target."
JS: OK, the Pulitzer Prize, the Academy of Arts and Sciences, what are you most proud of?

THEO WESTENBERGER/LIA

AB: Being alive.
JS: Favorite encounter with a political target?
AB: One time with Nixon, when he was running against Kennedy, he was in Ohio, and I was supposed to speak at Sigma Delta Chi that evening. So I peeled off from Nixon's campaign and went to do my speech. Turned out that Nixon was also there, giving a speech on nuclear energy or something else no one wanted to hear about. He spoke before me and acknowledged me, and when I came on stage, I said, "I'm so glad he preceded me, because I've always wondered what he looks like."
JS: What's your take on Andy Rooney and his 60 Minutes gig?
AB: He's great. All he has to do is hold up a carton of milk and he gets a great salary for that.
JS: Are you as much of a curmudgeon as him?
AB: I'm not a curmudgeon.
JS: How about Dave Barry. Do you read his column?
AB: Yeah, I love it. He's a good guy.
JS: One piece of advice you'd give someone who wanted to do what you do?
AB: I wouldn't. How can you tell someone how to be funny? When somebody asks me, I say, "Go into advertising."
JS: Do you have a writing routine?
AB: I write when I want to.
JS: What happens when you don't feel like being funny?
AB: There's no such thing as writer's block at a newspaper. They won't let you have it. You say to your editor, "I have writer's block," he says, "Get the hell outta my office."
JS: Would you like to be remembered as the Mark Twain of the 20th century?
AB: Well, I can't put myself in the same class as Mark Twain, but if somebody says I am, I won't deny it.
JS: If you hadn't become a newspaper columnist, what would you be doing?
AB: I'd be retired from the Marine Corps on a $200-a-month pension, probably living in South Carolina near Parris Island. I'm not a golf player, so I'd probably be bored.
JS: Ever regretted a column?
AB: Yes. On Martha's Vineyard at one time there was a shortage of meat. I wrote a column about having dinner with this family every night and another child was missing each night. That got such a terrible reaction.
JS: Would you have used profanity in your columns if you'd been able to?
AB: No. I don't use dirty words. I don't use swears. I've always assumed I was writing for every type of person, so I censored myself, in terms of not doing what people like Mort Sahl or George Carlin and those guys do. Because that's not me.
JS: Favorite quote of yours?
AB: It was part of a commencement speech and it keeps getting repeated. I said to the graduating class, "We gave you a perfect world. Now don't screw it up."
JS: One thing you wish you'd said?
AB: Oh, there are so many of those. But probably, "My tennis serve was in, and you can't tell me it's out." IB

ROMANTIC RINGLETS

MAKEUP

Bottom line: Pinks and bronzes often look like a day at the beach, but when paired with a pastel dress, they add up to romance.

Artist: Dara Klein for Stila, available at Filene's

Products (all by Stila):

• Illuminating Liquid Foundation smoothed all over the face gives a dewy, airbrushed look. Bronzer Skin Shade 2 brushed over the top adds warmth.

• Twig and Jezebel eyeshadows applied with a damp brush all over the lids enhance shine.

• Lots of Lash Visor Mascara coats the upper lashes.

• Camellia Convertible Color for Cheeks and Lips is brushed over the narrow part of the cheeks.

• Lip Polish brings sheer shine to lips.

• All Over Shimmer #8 is dabbed on the bridge of the nose and the cheeks for sheen.

HAIR

Bottom line: Don't fight your hair's natural wave. Enhance it and let it go free. Your natural texture can be the best look for you.

Stylist: Elaine Mitchell for Vidal Sassoon, 617-536-5496

Products (available at Vidal Sassoon): Mitchell applies Vidal Frizz Control Crème to the hair to define each curl, after which the hair is dried softly with a diffuser for maximum volume.

nadia

MAKEUP

Bottom line: This look is a natural mix of pinks and golden browns that create a simple, glowing complexion. Defined eyes that aren't overdone and a girly pink hue on the lips convey an ethereal, angelic look.

Artist: Mark Payne for Trish McEvoy, available at Saks Fifth Avenue

Products (all by Trish McEvoy):

• Ivory Concealer is smoothed over skin discolorations.

• Shell Eyeshadow extends from the lash line to the brow; 18 Karat Eyeshadow is layered over the Shell to give lids a golden glow; Bronze Shaper Eyeshadow runs along the lower lashes to create depth.

• Black Lash Curling Mascara coats lashes; Auburn Mascara crowns the tips of the upper lashes.

• Plush Pink Blush colors the apples of the cheeks; a light dusting of Dual Resort Blush gives a bronzed cast.

• Rosebud Lipliner lines and fills in the lips; pink gloss goes on top.

HAIR

Bottom line: Casual updos should be creative and sexy. Don't just put your hair in a ponytail; pull up pieces here and there and create your own work of art.

Stylist: Darren Le for Giuliano, 617-262-2220

Products (available at Giuliano): Le pulls half of the hair into a ponytail in the back with W8less Plus Molding Spray, leaving the front loose. He then twists the back hair into a large knot and pins it. The ends are sprayed with Shaper Plus hairspray.

BLUSHING BEAUTY

MAKEUP

Bottom line: Flushed cheeks on a soft face give a look of pureness and approachability.

Artist: Soul Lee for Bobbi Brown, available at Saks Fifth Avenue

Products (all by Bobbi Brown):

• Concealer # 2 in Sand conceals darkness under the eyes; Foundation Stick #2 evens out skin tone all over the face.

• Clear Brow Shaper keeps eyebrows in place.

• Iced Pink Crème Shadow Stick covers the whole lid. White shadow creates shine along the brow bone. The eyes are lined with Steel Shadow on the upper lash line.

• Smoked Lash Glimmer Mascara coats the lashes.

• Cheeks are colored with Soft Pink Blush.

• Pale Pink lipstick and Petal Pink Lipliner are used together on the lips.

HAIR

Bottom line: Try something different with your hair. Create a masterpiece with found items.

Stylist: William George for James Joseph Salon, 617-266-7222

Products (available at James Joseph Salon): George uses White Sands firm holding hair spray to control the hairline so it can be sewn. He then flat-irons the hair on top to create a sleek look. Styling lotion from Bumble and Bumble adds final definition. "The sewing look was inspired by a headband I saw a client wearing," says George, "but you can make any shape in the hair with needle and thread."

THE CAT'S MEOW
MAKEUP

Bottom line: Healthy skin and sexy eyes are this season's best looks. Cat eyes are everywhere. Just extend dark eyeliner to the farthest edge of your brows or use colored eyeliner to spice things up.

Artist: Eddie Funkhouser for Tony and Tina, available at Filene's

Products (all by Tony and Tina):

- Funkhouser applies Skin Refiner as a moisturizing base for the foundation and then uses a sponge to apply Kali Environmental Rescue foundation all over the face. Moon Ray pressed mineral powder is brushed on top.
- Brows are defined with Brown Eyeliner.
- Liquid Liner in Change circles the entire eye. The top liner extends all the way to the outer edge of the brow, and the bottom liner goes only about half the distance of the top liner.
- Progress/Perspective duo eyeshadows are swept over the entire lid; Silent/Unspoken duo eyeshadows are applied to the browbone.
- Herbal Black mascara is applied to the lashes.
- Self Assurance Herbal Blush colors the apples of the cheeks.
- Self-Healing Lips lip gloss palette in Mother Earth is used on the lips.

HAIR

Bottom line: To do something different with long hair, pin it up and pay tribute to divas past. Big hair is back, as long as it's soft and relatively understated.

Stylists: Michael Rossi and Alex Iacobacci for Avanti Salon, 617-267-4027

Products (all available at Avanti): Rossi and Iacobacci pin a temporary hair extension into the hair, then pull it piece by piece and define each curl with Kerastase Nutritive Lumi-Extract by L'Oreal. The curls get stacked on top of one another. Phyto Pro # 20 Hard Spray finishes off the look with a firm hold that's touchably soft.

TEAL TEMPTRESS
MAKEUP

Bottom line: Let skin show through and rejoice in your skin's accessories—freckles! Don't be afraid to use some well-placed color on your face.

Artist: Bianca Alexander for MAC, available at Filene's

Products (all by MAC):

- Moisture Feed Eye hydrates the eye area and face.
- Spot Cover Foundation with Studio Tech NW15 is smoothed all over the face.
- Aquadisiac eyeshadow is applied all around the eye, extending it to the outer edges.
- Improper Copper Highlights Natural blush colors the cheeks for a glowing complexion,
- Clear Lipglass used with Improper Copper emphasizes Dianne's own natural lip color.

HAIR

Bottom line: Have fun with your hair. Don't stick to the basics every day. Try something wild and creative.

Stylist: Scott Fontana, assisted by Jopino, for Salon Fontana, 617-375-8510

Products (all available at Salon Fontana): Fontana blow-dries Dianne's roots to give volume, using Alterna's spray wax to create texture. After drying, he teases the roots to support the ends of the hair. Bangs are kept flat and Fontana flat-irons the ends using Alterna's Sheer Pomade to hold them together. Hair is finished with Alterna's Maximum Finishing Spray.

BRONZE BEAUTY
MAKEUP

Bottom line: Bronzer and gold-hued lips and eyes add glamour while keeping a natural look.

Artist: Landy Dean for Chanel, available at Saks Fifth Avenue

Products (all by Chanel):

- Delay Moisturizer Bronze Universal is used as a base.
- Powder blush in Reflex Eye colors the cheeks.
- Lumieres Facette eyeliner sweeps across the top lid near the lash line; Intense Eye Pencil in Amber travels across the lower lash line.
- Sculpting Mascara, Extreme Length in brown coats lashes.
- Glossimer in Sirop brings shine to lips.

HAIR

Bottom line: Sometimes looking your best is about being natural.

POWERFUL POUT
MAKEUP

Bottom line: Light washes in vibrant berries give you a perfect springtime look. A powerful lip color is the uniform for a night on the town.

Artist: Jennifer Doctorovich for Clinique, available at Filene's

Products (all by Clinique):

- Doctorovich smooths sunglow foundation all over and brushes Glow 3 Neutral Powder over the top to reduce shine. All Over Color Rubs, in Sheer Radiance and Bronze Glow, color the cheeks and the bridge of the nose.
- Lilac Frost, Sugar Sugar, and Sugarberry Smashing eyeshadows are blended together and applied to the eyelids; Violet Quickliner for Eyes rims the eyes.
- Long Pretty Lashes Mascara in black coats the lashes.
- Honeyed Red Gel gives an added flush to the cheeks.
- Bamboo lip liner and Mystic Sheer Shimmer Gloss are used together on the lips.

HAIR

Bottom line: Go for tough-girl chic with a '50s throwback that's both sexy and edgy.

Stylist: Alex Iacobacci and Michael Rossi for Avanti Salon, 617-267-4027

Products (available at Avanti): Iacobacci and Rossi apply PhytoPro Gel #8 all over a wet head to give some hold. Then, they blow-dry the hair straight up and back while smoothing down the sides. Hair is finished with PhytoPro #20 Hard Spray for a strong hold. IB

TOTAL TRANSFORMATION

How to perk up your appearance in no time flat

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

When you look in the mirror, are you bored with what you see? Is there a diva hiding inside you who's bursting to get out? If so, you're not alone. Many of us crave a new look, especially around the change of seasons. To show you the kind of metamorphosis you can achieve in just a short period of time, we scheduled a head-to-toe makeover for one of our editorial colleagues. Throug her experience, you can learn how to change your physical a pearance so drastically and quickly that even your ow mother won't recognize you. (This kind of self-transform tion is ideal for high school reunions, job interviews or getti revenge on the last guy who dumped you.)

11am—Natural Body Polish at Giuliano Day Spa, 338 Newbury St., 617-262-2220

Since out-with-the-old is the goal, we started with a full-body scrub. This procedure sloughs away city grit to reveal healthy skin underneath. Body scrubs also increase circulation and incorporate a relaxing massage. Massage therapist Karen Bowen scrubbed Laurel's body from neck to feet with a loofah sponge and cornmeal mixture in Giuliano's Vichy Room. Laurel then steamed under a tent of moist, warm air and afterward was moisturized from head to toe with Giuliano Avocado Body Lotion. Cost:$55.

12:30 pm—Cut and color at Leon and Co., 84 Leonard St. (Belmont), 617-484-4777

Hairstylist Jay Dee Ferrara consulted with Laurel and decided that her hair was too dry and brittle; some length had to come off to reveal a healthy head of hair. "The length of her hair elongates her already thin, long face, so a shorter cut will look better on her," he adds. Cutting Laurel's hair to just above the shoulders, Ferrara layered it to give some movement and add volume. To amp up the color, Ferrara dyed it auburn with red highlights. Cost: $70 cut, $200 color.

2pm—Tanning at Tanning Etc., 485 Comm. Ave., 617-267-7744

Well, this one actually took a couple of days. We sent Laurel to the tanning bed three times to perk up her coloring. It gave her a warmer, healthier glow, without going overboard. Cost: $30.

2:30pm—Whitening at Brite Smile, 75 Newbury St., 617-867-9500

Laurel's teeth were slightly stained and we wanted to brighten her up a bit. Brite Smile bleached her teeth to a sparkling white using a light-activated bleaching gel. The result was dramatic. Cost: $600.

4pm—Manicure/mini-pedicure and eyebrow shaping at Beaucage, 71 Newbury St., 617-437-7171

Laurel has pretty, healthy nails, so a little cleanup and a couple of coats of red did the trick. "Red is a sexy, glamorous color and can transform anyone's hands and feet," says manicurist Jana Toussaint. Emma Belitsky thinned out Laurel's brows and defined them with waxing and plucking. Her perfect new arches frame her eyes wonderfully. Cost: $20 manicure, $35 mini-pedicure, $20 brow grooming.

5:45pm—New glasses at See, 125 Ne bury St., 617-236-0105

Tim Parks, manager of See, selecte new frames for Laurel. "Her o glasses were outdated; they didn flatter her face," says Parks. He chos pair with some color. They're a litt more playful and inviting, and t shape flatters Laurel's long, narro face. Cost: $249.

6:30pm—Makeup at Beauty Mark, 9 Pinckney St., 617-720-1555

To give Laurel a more glamorous loo Rebecca Pimentel added some found tion to even out her skin tone. Piment also added a bit more color than Lau usually wears to give a little more defi ition to her face. High-shine lip glo was the final step. All makeup by Lo Cost: $45.

7:30pm—Wardrobe selection at H& 350 Washington St., 617-482-7001

We chose an elegant but casual dre for Laurel. A black linen dress mak her look flirty and glamorous but al lets her move freely. The eye-catchi accessories are perfect for dressing u Cost: $49.

TOTAL COST: $1,373

Laurel Kirtz, a regular contributor to our Body & Mind section, is a self-described "natural woman." Her beauty regimen is about as minimalist as they come—she cleanses daily with soap and water and wears a little eye makeup every so often. She's had this low-maintenance look for a long time but feels it's time for a change. Her main goal: "I want to look more feminine."

5. Six Kitten Portable Lip and Eye Color Palette by Cat Cosmetics, $60. All-in-one palettes are always practical, but this one packs an extra color surge and comes with a huge mirror.

6. Foundation in Studio Tech by MAC, $26. You want coverage? This foundation is guaranteed to conceal anything that ails you.

7. Blot Film by MAC, $4.50. These baby-blue sheets soak up oil and caked-on makeup in a jiffy. Carry them in your purse for on-the-spot freshness.

8. Tinted Moisturizer in Tan by Laura Mercier, $38. Here's the perfect blend for warm days: a little bit of color, a lot of moisture.

19. Tony and Tina Lipgloss in Cosmic Valkyrei, $14. This is a great gloss for a night at the club. It's a girly pink with an intoxicating shot of sparkle.

20. Lip Color in Pink Lacquer, Red Lacquer and Cranberry Lacquer by Calvin Klein, $16 each. Each of these glosses covers like lipstick and packs a wallop of shine.

21. Lipstick in First Impression and Regent's Park by Fresh, $21 each. Fresh's lipsticks bring out the best of your own natural lip color.

22. Fluid Sheer Fluide Embellisseur by Giorgio Armani, $42. This liquid adds some color all over your face and stays put until you decide to wash it off.

23. Kate Spade Beauty Travel Vanity with body moisturizer, body wash, travel candle and sleeping mask, $60. This essential travel kit comes in a perfect Kate bag.

24. Blush in Terra by Calvin Klein, $24. A very natural brown-plum mix is surprisingly sheer, while adding just the right level of definition.

25. Creamy Lip Liner in Nude Pink by Bobbi Brown, $20. This is one of the most natural-looking liners out there. Put a coat under your favorite lipstick to make it last for hours.

26. Lip Shimmer in Champagne and Sand Sugar by Bobbi Brown, $18 each. These light, shimmery glosses give your lips a luminescent luster that may remind you of the inside of a seashell.

27. Venus Between Us Alien Eyes Shadow Trio in shades of blue by Rocket City, $16. For the daring, these dramatic shades of blue will make summer arrive that much faster.

BEAUTY EDITOR'S PICKS

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE PHOTOGRAPHED BY FURNALD/GRAY

I receive so much makeup from companies that want me to try their products that I should never have to set foot in a cosmetics department again. But there are some beauty products I just can't do without. The following are the items I actually buy—the best of the best.

CLOCKWISE ON SINK:

Lip Lacquer in Vagabond by Nars, $20. This lip gloss is perfect for that nude look, but it also has a hint of sparkle.

Frost Lipstick in "O" by MAC, $14. Here's the one lipstick that looks great on everyone; it shimmers with pink and gold undertones.

Lip Care Stick by Dr. Hauschka, $9.50. This moisturizing stick really works—and it lasts.

Ultra Facial Moisturizer SPF 15 by Kiehl's, $15.50. Every makeup artist I know uses this product to make skin soft, not greasy.

Super Flight Cream by Prescriptives, $35. Enjoy a surge of moisture for dehydrated skin.

Lumieres Facettes Iridescent Effects Eyes in Spotlight by Chanel, $28.50. Banish boring brown with the 3-D color in this compact.

Lip Polish in Tease and Tender by Lorac, $17.50 each. These glosses fit in my smallest handbag, and their opaque shine really lasts.

Lip Tint by Prada, $38 for box of 10. A lot of color is packed into a small package that fits anywhere.

Secret Camouflage two-shade concealer by Laura Mercier, $27. The dry concealer covers everything and doesn't look cakey. Perfect for touchups.

ON COUNTER FROM LEFT TO RIGHT:

Magic Liquid Powder by Prescriptives, $32.50. This powder is 70 percent water. It goes on wet and disguises little bumps in your complexion.

Lip gloss in Petal Shine and Taupe by Stila, $17 each. Super shiny glosses add dimension and fullness to your lips.

Eye Definer in Coffee by Calvin Klein, $14. This liner is not quite brown and not quite black—it's just dark enough for pretty, smoky eyes.

ON SHELF FROM LEFT TO RIGHT:

Eye Glitter in Starburst by Tony and Tina, $10. A bottle of glitter goes anywhere. Make it stay with Hope lipstick, $15, which works like a glue stick.

Brow liner in Strut, Flatter and Lingering by I $12 each. These skinny brow pencils are fine er to draw individual hairs for well-defined brows Completely Buff exfoliant by Completely I $34. This exfoliant is dry; add it to your cu cleanser to slough off dead skin.

Blush in Orgasm and Sin by Nars, $20 each. skinned gals should opt for Orgasm, which gives slight flush like…um, well, you know. For darker plexions, Sin is the ticket. It's dramatic but still natu Clinique Almost Lipstick in Black H $13.50. This barely-there color looks black bu ally goes on in a sheer, deep berry hue.

Matte Silk Lipstick in #4 by Giorgio Arman OK, this color is really dramatic, but pink is the h hue right now—and on a bare face, it really roc

TREAT YOURSELF

With new beauty services popping up every day, it's hard to see through the hype. Here are a few royal treatments that reign.

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

MICHAUD COSMETICS

Bambooing

World-renowned makeup artist and brow specialist Julie Michaud has expanded her brow-grooming prowess to include the ancient Parisian technique of bambooing. Not to be confused with tattooing, which can result in thick, unnatural looking brows, bambooing uses semi-permanent color to create a soft, diffused brow. A bamboo shoot with a needle attached is dipped in custom-mixed pigment and inserted just beneath the skin's surface. The technique gives the appearance of freshly powdered brows and lasts about two years—even longer with annual maintenance. An initial brow-shaping/bambooing session plus a touch-up within six to eight weeks costs $350. Additional touch-ups are $175. The price tag might seem a bit hefty, but this exotic treatment is pretty hard to come by—Michaud is one of only two bambooing specialists in the world.

THE NEWBURY CENTER FOR COSMETIC FACIAL PLASTIC SURGERY

Mini-Eyelift

Some plastic surgery procedures are now nearly as simple and painless as your regular manicure/pedicure. Dr. Ramsey Alsaraff, cosmetic surgeon at the Newbury Center, performs mini-blepharoplasty, or mini eyelifts, a procedure that erases or minimizes under-eye bags and dark circles without visible incisions. A small opening is made inside the eyelid, and the excess fat—which causes under-eye bags and circles—is removed and the skin smoothed. The natural-looking results last indefinitely. The procedure is said to be virtually painless, and the average patient experiences minimal swelling or bruising, which can be concealed with makeup in the following days. Alsaraff says that even people as young as 30 are requesting the procedure to combat hereditary fatty pockets. $4,000.

69 Newbury St., Boston (617-375-0500)

CANYON RANCH

Car Service

Canyon Ranch is probably one of the Berkshires' more tempting attractions. The luxury health and beauty oasis has provided many a city slicker with the perfect hedonistic escape. The only downfall: it's not exactly a T ride away. Now the spa's relaxation gurus have come up with a solution for carless urbanites and those who simply don't feel like navigating I-90 West. Door-to-door car service is available for $300 so you can begin your journey to inner zen from your doorstep.

SPLASH SPA

Epicuren Facial

Any of the facials available at Splash Spa in the Sports Club/LA is like a sip from the fountain of youth, but one in particular recently got my attention. The Epicuren Facial claims to rejuvenate skin cells by stimulating natural chemical reactions. Of course, these days almost every product on the market claims to turn back time by an equally ambiguous process. However, with a little more digging I learned that the Epicuren method was developed by doctors to treat burn victims. The active ingredients catalyze cell turnover and encourage significantly healthier skin. After receiving the 80-minute facial from one of Splash's estheticians, you can maintain it yourself at home with products available for purchase. $125 for Sports Club/LA members; $130 for non-members.

The Sports Club/LA, 4 Avery St., Boston (617-375-8580)

Soft Pack Treatment

When I gaze at Giuliano's body wrap menu, I feel like a kid in a candy shop. There's the nourishing Swiss Goat Butter Crème Wrap; the Evening Primrose Crème Wrap for hydration and balance; the Almond Oil Crème Wrap defending against free radicals; the Vitamin E Oil Wrap for smooth, supple skin; the slenderizing Seaweed Body Wrap; and last, but not least, the Austrian Moor Mud Wrap for a girl's mortal enemies: water retention and cellulite. Giuliano's expert staff executes each wrap using their unique Soft Pack Treatment. Once you're wrapped up, you lie in the weightless Soft Pack bed, encapsulated by a temperature-controlled, pressure-free cushion of water. From there, it's 50 minutes of floating while the Pack allows 10 times the product absorption rate of any other method. $105.

338 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-2220)

AT-HOME SPA

To keep the ravages of the daily grind at bay, get your hands on these at-home remedies:

1. Pedicure in a can. Philosophy's pedicure kit comes complete with everything you need (minus the nail polish) to pamper your tootsies and keep your southern digits looking great. $12.50 at Sephora.

2. Brown Sugar Body Polish. This sweet, lemon-scented concoction blends essential oils and chunks of brown sugar for the best body polish I've ever tried. $58 at Fresh.

3. Forget Calgon; soak your body in Bath Tea by Deep Steep. It's available in Honeydew Spearmint, Lavender Chamomile, Grapefruit Bergamot and Rosemary Mint (shown). The fragrance is absolutely intoxicating. $5 at www.deepsteep.com.

4. Kiehl's Blue Astringent cleans your face to a shine—the good kind. It grabs cleanser or makeup residue and is gentle enough for everyday use. $9.50 at Kiehl's.

5. Supersmile teeth-whitening system really delivers. The toothpaste alone (shown with accelerator kit) gives you teeth that would make any dentist proud, and even after the first use, your pearly whites are a shade lighter. $32 at The Beauty Mark.

6. Bobbi Brown recently unveiled her new skin care line and the Vitamin Enriched Cream steals the show. It hydrates without making you feel oily. Perfect for after a pore-cleansing masque. $42.

7. Origins has cornered the market on over-the-counter masques. My favorites are the Clear Improvement charcoal masque, which sucks all the grungy stuff out of pores and leaves your face bright and polished, and the Drink Up moisturizing masque. It delivers a shot of moisture perfect for curing battered winter skin. Both $18.50.

WELL-GROOMED

Answers to FAQs for the stylish male

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

They may be reluctant to ask the questions, but men do want advice on caring for their hair, skin, nails, etc. Mostly in the uninhibited atmosphere of local bars, IMPROPER staffers quizzed their male friends to find out want they want to know about looking good. Here are their top questions and our answers:

What haircuts are currently in style?

Sally Drinkwater, creative director of Lord's and Lady's Hair Salon in West Roxbury, describes today's top three hair trends for men:

1. Adding a bit of color to your hair is an easy way to update your look. Go for a lighter color on the top; choose a shade that looks like you've been in the Caribbean all winter. If you have the messy look, scatter chunks of color to create some contrast.

2. Shorter haircuts should be tighter on the sides and back with a smooth transition to a longer top. If you work in a conservative environment, you can comb your hair down during the day and spike it up or make it messy in the evening. Try Bumble and Bumble Styling Wax, $15, for both controlled and chaotic styles.

3. If you opt for a longer mane (a current trend), hair that hangs down toward your face a bit is the style. It shouldn't be overly groomed, but it shouldn't be out of control, either. Use Bumble and Bumble Sumo Wax, $19, or Bumble and Bumble Sumo Tech, $19, to tame long locks. (Bumble and Bumble products are available at Lord's and Lady's. Men's haircut at Lord's and Lady's, $25; color, $45.)

Should I pluck my eyebrows?

If you have a unibrow (a single, uninterrupted brow), run (do not walk!) to the store, purchase a plucking device and clear out a hairless space in the middle. Some men may feel compelled to go to a salon for a waxing, but it takes a real expert to shape a man's brows properly without overdoing it. If you're going to pluck, use a sharp tweezer. Tweezerman tweezers (available at Saks for around $20) are the sharpest, and you can grab the tiniest hair with them. Pluck judiciously along the inside edge of your brow and remove any unruly hairs that stand out in wiry rebellion.

What should I do about my dry face?

If there's one thing guys can't stand, it's having to use a lot of products. Try Kiehl's menthol ated After-Shave All-Day Moisturizer $14. Rub a nickel-sized dab onto your face after shaving, and it'll do the trick.

How do I get the closest shave?

Exfoliating your face with a washcloth will eliminate ingrown hairs and little red bumps. Another trick is to let the shaving cream sit on your face (try Kiehl's Ultimate Brushless Shave Cream, $11) for a minute before shaving to soften the hair. Always use a new razor blade and a good razor (we like the Gillette Mach 3, $7.29 at drugstores) and moisturize afterward.

What are good soaps to use in the shower?

Milky-looking soaps leave a residue and dry out your skin. Try a liquid body cleanser for men like Kiehl's Pour Homme Bath and Shower Liquid Body Cleanser, $13. If you have dry skin, try Fresh's Umbrian Clay Exfoliating Body Cleanser, $48. It sloughs off dead skin and draws out impurities while moisturizing.

Should I get a manicure and pedicure?

Most guys bristle at the notion of indulging in this kind of pampering, thinking it's strictly for women. But more and more men are treating themselves to pristine hands and feet. (Don't worry; we won't tell anyone.) If you do decide to take the plunge, try Maksou Day Spa on Newbury Street, $23 for a manicure; $45 for a pedicure.

What do I do about back hair?

Deciding whether to keep your back hair is up to you, but if you want to go the clean route, here are some options: You can go to a spa and have it waxed. This is pretty painful but very effective—it lasts between three and four weeks. You can talk a (very good) friend into doing the job with sugar wax (try Sally Hansen Sugar Wax Hair Remover Kit, $7.99 at drugstores), which doesn't require melting. But whatever you do, don't shave. Nobody likes back stubble.

Should I trim my nose and ear hair?

If you can see nose or ear hair, it's too long. There are a few cures to these dilemmas. You can buy nose and ear hair trimmers, which are scissors with a safe, rounded tip, or you can go to the Sharper Image and pick up a Turbogroomer for $59.95. The Turbogroomer has spinning blades that do the job so quickly you won't even have to think about what you're doing. IB

YIKIES! NATION OF NIKES

Branded, by Alissa Quart, describes the alarming ways that teenagers are roped into the culture of commercialism.

Salesmanship directed at teenagers—everything from clothes and makeup to colleges—is the disturbing topic of Branded. The book's title is an apt play on words, as if these highly packaged items were sizzled right into the consumer's skin. Alissa Quart cruises the hyper-name-branded world in which teenagers, as trend-spotters, act as sleuths among their own kind, helping to complete the loop that runs between consumer longings and the machinery that grinds out ever more stuff. And it's not only T-shirts and lipsticks; plastic surgery and breast implants are increasingly popular among some teens. Moreover, as Quart horrifyingly details, unhealthy ideas can be promoted as trends. For example, pro-anorexia websites promote shivering thinness. Even colleges ("Logo U") have become increasingly product-like, with packaging and promotion campaigns involving tutors and coaches (Quart names a local private school) helping pitch and spin a student toward a particular college. Watch out, Quart suggests: You are wholly owned.

SLEEK CHIC IN SOMERVILLE

Cibeline, at 85 Holland Street, Somerville (617-625-2229) sells the owner's own fashion designs. She will customize a garment to your size specifications if necessary.

Cibeline Sariano, speaking of her shop's silvered tin ceilings and walls, shakes her head in an Egyptian wiggle: "It's a little slice of Soho, or L.A." Cibeline, who has worked for designers Richard Tyler and Liz Claiborne, has created a clothing line focusing on beautifully made career clothes—pants, skirts and jackets to be bought singly or matched. Each piece highlights the refinement of the "high-end designer fabrics" Cibeline is drawn to. Audrey Hepburn's picture gazing down soulfully on a pale, powdery-blue wool dress and jacket only reinforces the outfit's elegance. The shop sells snazzy black pants made of stretch acetate, a wonderfully resilient material, with the lining "peached" for leg-caressing comfort. Given the power-suit dignity of her clothes—pinstripes, or a marvelously subtle glen plaid, for example—it's bracing to see jackets lined in red or blue that splash their secret inner life when the wind flips them open. Some pants here have a boot cut, others taper tightly. Accessories, like simple necklaces, bright little bags (one made of a cigar box with wood-beaded handle) add that mischievous ping to the high-class feeling of her designs.

BABY BONUS

Viacord (866-835-0968) preserves umbilical cord blood for the baby's potential future medical needs (or possibly those of relatives). The cost is $1,275, plus $95 annually for storage.

When a woman gives birth, a valuable resource that is usually discarded emerges along with the inestimable treasure of a baby. That would be the umbilical cord, the conduit that has fed that baby in utero. It's been known since the 1980s that the umbilical cord, with its richness of stem cells—the building blocks of blood and the immune system—can be stored for use in the future, should medical needs arise. The baby's blood is a 100 percent match for the child, in case of need, and has a 25 percent chance of matching a sibling, parents or grandparents. How touching for a baby to unwittingly become a junior lifesaver! Among the nearly 5 diseases these stem cells can help treat are stroke, neurological disorders, certain types of diabetes, lupus and 12 kinds of cancer. Easier and cheaper than transplanting stem cells from bone marrow, this method takes just a few minutes during the joyful event that is childbirth. Collection and transport are available 24 hours a day. This fleeting opportunity could yield amazing long-term benefits.

Encore!

Mistral chef/owner Jamie Mammano does it again with his exquisite Italian eatery, Teatro

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

When I walked into Teatro, I could not believe my eyes. The low, drop ceiling that had been in place when this space housed Galleria Italiana was gone, revealing a magnificent, high vaulted ceiling. Decorated with gold-painted swirls, wreaths and urns above a similarly decorated frieze, the ceiling now has a classical look. In this stately setting, one would not be surprised to see toga-clad senators seated at the bar.

Blue light emanates from just below the vaulting to bathe the ceiling and frieze in a cool glow. Textured marble walls, glossy black granite tables, modern chairs with contoured seats and upholstered banquettes suggest style, if not elegance. An imposing, high-arched window frames a view across Tremont Street to the southeastern corner of Boston Common. The room has an aura of refinement, even majesty, as befits its history as a former synagogue.

Particularly eye-catching are the stainless-steel spiral chandeliers over the bar, from which hang crystal pendants of varying sizes and shapes. I was charmed and delighted by many small touches, like the substantial pewter salt shaker and pepper mill; a small rectangular dish with two wells, one for butter and another for extra-virgin olive oil; thick, absorbent white cotton napkins; and sleek white dinnerware, including an elongated oval platter—pointed rather like a surfboard—that is used for serving an elaborate antipasto for two. Although the noise level is high, a function of the unrelentingly hard surfaces of bare tables, marble walls and tile floor, it does not grate but rather evokes the vitality of the place.

Teatro's prices are surprisingly reasonable, particularly for a chic downtown eatery. Appetizers were priced from $7 to $12, while pastas and main courses ranged from the mid-teens to $21. An incomparable starter was a classic Caesar salad ($7). Tender, impeccably crisp inner leaves of fresh romaine lettuce were dressed in a creamy mustard-laced vinaigrette, enlivened with a combination of garlic, anchovies, thin shavings of Parmesan and crunchy house-made croutons. White cheese pizza with hot peppers and coarse sea salt ($12) consisted of an ultra-thin, crispy crust with even thinner slices of green chiles and tomatoes, a coating of Bel Paese, Romano, mascarpone and Parmesan cheeses and a harvest of fresh arugula leaves. The combination of tastes and textures of the cheeses alone—salty, sweet, mellow, sharp, creamy, grainy—made the offering particularly memorable.

One evening, we ordered the grilled Atlantic salmon with cracked-mustard glaze and broccoli rabe ($20) to share as a fish course. The thick fillet of boneless salmon had been divided and put on plates in the kitchen, a gracious gesture that distinguishes the patron-friendly from the run-of-the-mill restaurant. It was grilled to a perfect texture, with the moist, flavorful flesh just slightly red, and the sweet, savory mustard glaze offsetting the fish's fatty richness. An accompaniment of small, slightly flattened baked potatoes, redolent of rosemary, along with garlicky broccoli rabe, made those half portions meals in themselves. Among an all-star cast of pasta offerings, the spaghetti alla chitarra carbonara ($16) deserved marquee billing. This variety of fresh linguini, named for the guitar strings it resembles, was exquisitely dressed in a cream sauce with hefty, smoky chunks of pancetta, fresh basil leaves and shavings of Reggiano Parmigiano. Bravo.

Moving on to true secondi, or Italian main courses, I found the char-grilled game hen with garlic, lemon and herb baste ($17) terrific. This small bird had been marinated with herb-infused olive oil, grilled to a golden-brown turn, and then split and splayed across a mashed-potato base that shared the olive oil and garlic flavors of the marinade, with broad-leafed Italian parsley scattered on top. Roasted or grilled poultry is a good test of a kitchen's ability to turn out simple things well and to make the ordinary taste special. Teatro's game hen was indeed an audience pleaser.

Finally, veal saltimbocca, a combination of a tender veal cutlet sautéed and layered with prosciutto, sage, wild mushrooms and Parmesan cheese, may not have jumped off the plate toward our mouths—despite the literal meaning of its name—but the combination of tastes and textures made it a sensory delight. It was a shame that an exquisite portion of creamed spinach lay hiding beneath the veal. It deserved star billing, or at least a bit more recognition than it got.

Slow-cooked pork shank with sweet-potato mash.

High vaulted ceilings are evidence of Teatro's past life as a synagogue.

Teatro's wine list was a delight. Predominantly Italian, with a few California selections thrown in as understudies, the wines are well chosen and reasonably priced. No fewer than 18 wines are offered by the glass and 13-ounce carafe. Few upscale restaurants in Boston offer wine for $6 a glass, but Teatro has seven of them. We enjoyed the Montepulciano Travanto from Abruzzi one evening, a fruity yet well-structured red that went particularly well with the pasta ($6 glass; $12 carafe). Another offering at the same price, the Sangiovese DiMajo Norante from Italy's midboot Molise province (next door to Abruzzi), was bigger and fuller, with good acid to balance its forward fruit.

Service at Teatro was inexperienced but earnest. I did see waitpersons clearing the plate of a neighboring diner while her companion was in midbite—a service shortcoming that seems almost universal in American restaurants, where there seems to be a compulsion to whisk empty plates away the moment a fork is laid to rest. In other respects, service enhancements nearly compensated for this lack of finesse. Tableware was replaced frequently, water glasses filled, and olive oil replenished along with incomparably crusty Tuscan loaves from Cambridge's Hi-Rise Bread Co.

Teatro, a spectacular addition to the Theater District, is already playing to rave reviews as it nourishes pre-theater and post-theater throngs. Its high style and star-quality cuisine belie its low-budget production. It's clearly destined for a long and successful run. iB

Springing Ahead?

Patio preview…to brie or not to brie…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Spring is "mud season" in more ways than one this year. While we're plodding through the literal mud, and our military is slogging through a mess overseas, restaurants are getting bogged down in the swamp of an economy that's stagnant at best. Rumors abound of restaurants that are struggling to stay afloat or up for sale. In Arlington, the charming Tea Tray in the Sky is packing its tea bags and closing its doors after less than a year.

At a time when they are focusing on the bottom line for their survival, restaurants are less able to lend support to fund-raisers and special events. This year, the eagerly anticipated Architectural Masters of Pastry competition, brought to us under the auspices of the New England Pastry Guild and originally slated for late March, is a non-starter. Guild founder and president Lee Napoli says a lack of corporate sponsorship, as well as the reluctance of many low-profile pastry chefs to invest the required time, resulted in the event's cancellation.

Napoli expects the disappointment to be temporary, however. "We'll be back," she promises. We'll keep you posted. Napoli, by the way, has signed on full-time with Sandrine's Bistro after consulting on the pastry menu for a few months. Expect Sandrine's to start serving brunch, starring Napoli's homemade croissants, very soon.

On the brighter side, a new spot—which may or may not be named Solstice—will open in late spring in the Tea Tray's location. Apparently, after choosing the name and beginning the process of designing a logo, the Solstice folks learned of a Mission Hill eatery called the Solstice Café. Whatever the name, the new place will optimistically feature cozier, more luxurious décor, a more upscale menu, a cocktail lounge and a revamped menu from Bill Flumerfelt, Tea Tray's former chef.

Speaking of sun, when the weather finally warms up, we'll have new alternatives for outdoor drinking and dining. Finale in Harvard Square has enclosed its outdoor patio, where it will provide evening table service, with a sculpted railing commissioned from Somerville artist David Tonnesen. The newly opened Bambara, near MIT and adjacent to the Hotel Marlowe, offers American brasserie-style fare both inside its sleek, jewel-toned dining room and outdoors on the patio. Spring breezes will be just the thing to accompany grilled Maine scallops with baby spinach salad, red bliss brandade and tomato confit purée. And it's not really a dining space, but chef David Daniels' newly minted (sorry) rooftop greenhouse garden at XV Beacon will provide herbs, spices, heirloom tomatoes and more for the kitchen at The Federalist. On the rooftop deck, we're told, strawberry bushes will be planted to provide "hand-picked" berries for the pastry menu. So what do other restaurants use to harvest strawberries, cherry pickers?

Come warmer weather, the newly opened Bambara in Cambridge plans to offer patio dining.

It won't be long before Sonsie opens its French doors (or is it "freedom doors" now?) onto the Newbury Street sidewalk. And if you're on the freedom-fries bandwagon, feel free to divest yourself of any French truffles, pâté or wine you may have on hand by sending the offending item(s) to me or J. Charles Mokriski, c/o THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN. Seriously, whatever your politics, this is a fine time for all of us to increase our support of locally grown produce (asparagus—it won't be long now!), neighborhood restaurants and, of course, local vineyards. Westport Rivers' sparkling wines are delicious, and worth buying whether you're French-bashing or simply throwing a bash. For the sake of hope and unity, let's all raise a glass and drink to better times ahead. IB

WINE

Cheese Pairings

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

One of my all-time favorite combinations is port and Stilton, but at a recent seminar/tasting I conducted at Finale, I decided to depart from that time-honored combination and present five different styles of the great Portuguese fortified wine with cheeses of several different styles and origins. It was interesting to see how the diverse flavor and texture combinations worked together. In general the aged tawny ports, with their softer, nuttier, dried-fruit flavors, were just delicious with smoky, earthy cheeses, such as an alpine Swiss Tête de Moine or Spanish Zamorano, while the darker, more intensely concentrated and tannic-red ports, with their spicy, chocolaty berry flavors, blended beautifully with harder, dry-aged cheeses, like Artavaggio from Lombardy. It got me thinking about other memorable wine and cheese pairings I've enjoyed over the years, most of which I stumbled upon purely by accident, because I happened to have had some cheese at home and had not finished my dinner wine.

One of my favorite cheeses, l'Explorateur, is so rich and creamy that it seemed to defy matching. Whatever wine I tried, the cheese completely stripped its flavor. The greatest wines, those with the most delicate and complex mix of flavors resulting from long aging, were the greatest disappointments. Their balance would be thrown off entirely. But a young grand cru red Burgundy from a very ripe vintage proved the cheese's equal. Its lush, velvety, red fruit flavor, deeply saturated with ripe cherries and sweet spices, harmonized incredibly well with the buttery cheese. The only problem is, these kinds of wines are very expensive and it's a shame to deliberately drink them too young. Somehow even really good Oregon or central pinot noir has never quite reached the same heights. The lesser Burgundies I've tried have been completely obliterated.

Along the same lines, a lightly tangy double crème such as brie de Meaux has often worked well for me with top-quality Pomerol, the succulent plummy chocolate-like spice of a wine such as Château Gazin or Château Nenin in a ripe vintage standing up nicely to the cheese's rich textures. Comparable-quality higher-tannin wines from the Medoc, on the other hand, inevitably seem to fall flat. This is perhaps not that surprising, but the fact that moderately priced herb-accented Chilean Carmeneres should go nicely with such an aristocratic cheese constituted a great discovery. Their density and exuberant berry-like fruitiness has proven remarkably compatible with this creamy French favorite.

Rioja reserva and Morbier are a combination I try a lot since I discovered it. The soft textures and the flavors—smooth, understated, well-aged, nutty, caramel-like, fruity—in both the wine and the cheese echo one another nicely. Highly recommended.

Some of my favorite wine and cheese discoveries have involved Alsatian Riesling and gewurztraminer, the latter of which I have found to be among the most versatile of wines for complementing a wide variety of serious cheeses. The key with these white wines is unusually high levels of fruit extraction, as is the case with the rioja reserva and Pomerol. But even lighter, steelier Alsatian whites seem to have a natural affinity for many different types of cheese, adapting well to even the most assertive. Gorgonzola and vendange tardive gewurztraminer? Try it, it's delicious.

Normally I tend to think of tangy goat cheeses as partners for white wine, and specifically sauvignon blanc, but a boldly fruity Chianti Classico from the very ripe 1997 vintage once did admirably with one of these notoriously fickle cheeses. The cheese was covered in peppercorns, and perhaps this helped to set up the affinity, but other, more logical red wines that I later tried it with, such as Rhone syrahs and big, strapping California cabernets, were nowhere near as complementary as the Chianti.

In addition to port, there are other sweet wines that have struck me as delicious with cheeses. Probably the most enjoyable combination I've tried is a highly salty, tangy bleu d'Auvergne with a moelleux Vouvray or Quarts de Chaume, chenin blanc–based wines whose syrupy, apricot-like tang and high acidity strike me as appropriately assertive to mellow the cheese a bit. Another exciting combination I've tried in this mode is a young muscat de Beaumes-de-Venise (a white fortified wine from France) with Maytag blue.

What are some of the wine categories I've never had much success with, despite the most careful planning? Delicate white Burgundies, very mild and understated whites like pinot blanc or, for that matter pinot grigio, zinfandels (although logically they should work), southern Rhone reds, California sauvignon blancs, Australian chardonnay—the list could go on. On the other hand, there is one cheese that seems to work with everything: authentic mozzarella di bufala.

One of only 18 Americans with a Master of Wine certification, Sandy Block has been the IMPROPER's wine editor since 1993. He is assistant vice president of wine for Horizon Beverage.

Art: Majestic Theaters

These days it's tempting to wish you could miraculously have a Pleasantville experience—you're watching TV, and suddenly you get beamed back to a black-and-white, Leave It to Beaver world where everything is...well, pleasant. A new exhibit at the Somerville Museum called The Lost Theatres of Somerville won't exactly transport you through time, but it will briefly immerse you in a simpler, quieter, more familial era. The exhibit explores the history of Somerville's 14 historic movie theaters, only one of which is still operating today. Lost Theatres of Somerville, curated by David Guss, a professor of anthropology at Tufts University, looks at the moviegoing experience before the advent of television, when theaters were gathering places for families and entire neighborhoods. Photographs and memorabilia including posters, ads and seats show how public entertainment changed from 1904, when movies first came to Somerville, to the era of modern multiplexes. It's unlikely that you could, but don't miss the 10-foot neon marquee from the old Paramount. Somerville Museum, One Westwood Road, Somerville (617-666-9810). Thu., 2-7pm, Fri., 2-5pm and Sat., 12-5pm.

Music: That Old Black Magic

What better reason to jump, jive and wail than a tribute to the '50s duo who practically own the phrase? At the Regattabar on April 3, vocalists Jim Porcella and Ida Zecco pay tribute to Louis Prima and Keely Smith, the swinging, jazz-singing married couple who made those lyrics famous. Porcella and Zecco (who are, appropriately enough, also a husband-and-wife team) bring along a full backup band for a nightlong celebration of the swing/Dixieland/pop songs of Prima and Smith. We recommend ordering a mint julep while you watch—maybe it will encourage the duo to play the song by that name. Regattabar, Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (617-661-5000). 8:30pm. $20.

SAT./APRIL 5

Tastings: 200 Bottles of Beer on the Wall

According to Sandy Block, the IMPROPER's wine columnist, mere 12 percent of Americans account for 90 percent of the wine consumed in this country. So what's everyone else drinking? Our favorite beverage, of course: beer! That's why you'll find us as giddy as kids in a candy shop at the annual Boston Beer Summit, sampling some of the 200 beers offered. Within the confines of the Castle at Park Plaza, more than 50 breweries from Canada, Ireland, Scotland, England, Belgium, Germany, Italy, France and the United States will be on hand to quench your thirst, as well as educate you on the differences between bock, brown ale, bitter and barley wine. The Castle at Park Plaza, 130 Columbus Ave., Boston. www.beersummit.com. 1-5pm and 6-10pm. $25, $30 at the door.

CityScope: Saucy Satire

Once a year, local pols, media personalities and CEOs let down their hair—and, in some cases, their pants—at the Banned in Boston benefit at Avalon. In years past, this night of saucy satire has found nightclub impresario Patrick Lyons onstage playing Whitey Bulger at a nudist camp, and Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton posing as Dick Cheney delivering "The Angina Monologues." What's the point? To entertain, of course (where else could you see Robert Reich playing former governor Jane Swift?), as well as raise money for Urban Improv, a youth violence prevention program. Among this year's performers are Mayor Tom Menino and National Public Radio's "Click and Clack" (Tom and Ray Magliozzi), plus a bevy of chefs who'll cook up a feast for guests before the show. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-524-7045). April 4, 6pm. $75-$150.

Natalie Toro as Mary Magdalene and Sebastian Bach as Jesus Christ

TUE./APRIL 15–SUN./APRIL 20

Performing Arts: Bless You

While perusing the press release for the Wang Theatre's latest production, Jesus Christ Superstar, a cast member's name caught our eye: Sebastian Bach as Jesus Christ. Wait a minute—Sebastian Bach? As in the one-time frontman for hair-metal band Skid Row? As in the wildman who, after being hit in the head by a bottle thrown onstage, hurled the bottle back into the crowd, hitting a young girl, and then physically assaulted an audience member? Yeah, that Sebastian Bach, a publicist confirmed. "Excellent," we said. "We're there." Not that we'd miss Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber's blockbuster musical about the last seven days in the life of Jesus of Nazareth, but the addition of Bach—who, by the way, earned favorable notice with his performance in Jekyll & Hyde on Broadway—makes this one a can't-miss event. Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). Tue., Thu. and Fri., 8pm; Wed., 7pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 1 and 7pm. April 15-20. $28-$70.

CityScope: A Night to Score

Let it be known that the Boston Breakers know how to make the best shots—both on and off the field. The entire team of 18 will tend bar and serve food at the Kells in Allston April 10, donating all their tips to Special Olympics Massachusetts. We hear that the Kells' owner Jerry Quinn will match the tips dollar for dollar—so lay down those greenbacks liberally. The Breakers, who make their home debut this season on April 26 at Nickerson Field, will also mix with the crowd, sign autographs and pose for photos. Rest assured that all the Breakers' raving 10-year-old fans won't be in attendance—it's a 21+ event. The Kells, 161 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-782-9082). www.bostonbreakers.com. 9-11pm. No cover.

Movies: United Artists

His first film came out almost 90 years ago, but Charlie Chaplin's reputation lives on. The small, strangely mannered "tramp" with the toothbrush mustache, undersize bowler hat and bamboo cane was as funny and eccentric as they come. Chaplin's continuing popularity recently led to the restoration of his politically charged 1940 film The Great Dictator, and the new reissue is set to make the cinematic rounds. (The screening this week at the MFA is the restored film's second showing in the U.S.) Chaplin began filming The Great Dictator at the beginning of World War II and it's believed to be the only movie of its time to criticize fascism in Europe and Hitler's treatment of the Jews. For this screening, presented by the Boston Jewish Film Festival, Kiera Chaplin (Charlie's granddaughter and Eugene O'Neill's great-granddaughter) will introduce the film. Kiera is an actor in her own right, having appeared most recent in The Importance of Being Earnest, and she will speak about The Great Dictator and her grandfather. 7:30pm. $9. Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave. (617-267-9300).

Books & Poetry: Ode Oasis

As the April 21 Boston Marathon inspires athletes everywhere to train hard, a different kind of marathon has caught our attention—and it involves no panting, sweating or physical exertion whatsoever, which means we like it already. The two-day Boston Poetry Marathon is exercise for the brain, with participation by 56 novice and veteran poets. Among the more prominent poets featured in the third annual fest are Pam Bernard, Frank Bidart, Erica Funkhouser, X.J. Kennedy and Lloyd Schwartz. Many of the bards' books will be available for purchase, and a portion of book sale proceeds will be donated to the Boston Public Library. Don't forget to wear black. BPL, Rabb Lecture Hall, 700 Boylston St., Boston (617-536-5400). www.bpl.org. April 12, 10am-5pm; April 13, 1-5pm. Free.

THU./APRIL 10

Movies: Indie Queen

"Hi Joe. How are you? I love you. You invade my soul." No matter how many films Lili Taylor has appeared in (somewhere around 50), these immortal words will forever be associated with her role as the guitar-strumming, emotionally unstable Corey in the 1989 movie Say Anything. Since that film, Taylor has made a name for herself as an indie queen, taking on nontraditional, quirky roles in low-budget independent films like Dogfight, Arizona Dream, The Haunting and I Shot Andy Warhol. In recent years, Taylor has made forays into more mainstream fare with movies like Pecker and High Fidelity, as well as a stint on HBO's Six Feet Under. The recent announcement that Taylor will take to the Brattle stage for a discussion about her career had fans clamoring for tickets, but surprisingly, there are still some left. Independent film producer Amy Geller moderates the discussion, and a screening of the 1996 film Girls Town, which Taylor co-wrote and starred in, follows. Tickets are $12 and are available through www.ticketweb.com. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837). 7pm.

Tastings: Tasty Delight

After attending roughly a zillion "Taste of" events over the yea (it seems like every town or neighborhood has one), we consider ourselves experts in the art of making a hearty mea out of tiny portions. And although we're loath to give away ou tricks—for fear that you'll beat us to the punch, literally—we feel compelled to prepare you for two such events this month the IMPROPER-sponsored Taste of Beacon Hill at the Ritz-Carl Boston April 9, and Taste of the Back Bay at the Wang Cen Grand Lobby April 11. Both feature samples prepared by loca chefs, plus beer and wine, and both benefit local charities. Bu before you go, take note: Get there when the doors open; immediately set your things down at a table so you're unencumbered; make several trips back and forth between th booths and the table (without eating) before the lines get long and seek out the booths of the most desirable chefs first. Th sit back, relax and take in the scene—and your dinner. See Tastings on page 44 for more information.

Keeping the Pace

Israel Horovitz's new adaptation of the Italian one-act play Marathon goes the distance

While most stage actors need to be in decent physical shape to withstand a rigorous rehearsal and performance schedule, Adam Paltrowitz and Eric Laurits, lead actors in Israel Horovitz's upcoming production, Marathon, took training to another level. The pair ran up to seven miles a day to prepare for their roles as two athletes training for the New York Marathon. "The actors are not pretending—they can't fake it," says Paltrowitz. "[We] run for the entire 70 minutes of the show, and the audience is right there with [us], sharing our triumphs and our struggles."

In January, Paltrowitz and Laurits starred in a British adaptation of the one-act play by Italian playwright Edoardo Erba at the Stoneham Theatre. The show received good reviews, but "there were a few difficulties with the British colloquialisms that we had to deal with," says director Weylin Symes. Enter Israel Horovitz, playwright and part-time Gloucester resident, who took on the project at Erba's insistence. (Erba knew that Horovitz was a runner and had written about sports in the past.) Horovitz's adaptation opens at the Tremont Theatre April 10—11 days before the Boston Marathon.

The conversation between two Italian men training for the marathon is the "typical testosterone-injected conversation," says Horovitz, who drew upon his own six-time experience running the New York Marathon to make the dialogue more realistic. "Runners speak in such an inbred way—it was easier for me to write because I'm a runner myself."

The show is currently playing in New York at the People's Theater to rave reviews, and interestingly enough, "more than half the audience is wearing running shoes," says Horovitz. As for the actors themselves, "by the time they open in Boston, they'll either be extremely fit...or dead," he jokes. Tremont Theatre, 276 Tremont St., Boston (617-728-4321). Thu.-Sat., 8pm; Sun., 2pm. April 10-20. $25. —Julie Short

SCIENTIFIC AMERICANS

The Core gets mired in over-the-top absurdity

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Why couldn't The Core have been content to be a lean, mean B movie? It certainly had the makings of something more than a Hollywood white elephant. Director Jon Amiel has offbeat fare like The Singing Detective and Sommersby to his credit, and the cast is full of people like Aaron Eckhart, Hilary Swank, Stanley Tucci and Bruce Greenwood, who've ascended into a big studio movie like this after many smaller films. But instead of these folks putting a distinctive stamp on a standard sci-fi/action story, the opposite ultimately happens. They get squashed into mush.

With its save-the-world plot, scientific mumbo-jumbo, contrived big moments, special-effects overload and ribbon-tied happy ending, The Core is really just a big, stiff summer movie that's arrived early. But it does offer an equally big movie lesson: Saving the world is apparently a lot easier than making an action-adventure with a little cleverness and style.

Josh (Aaron Eckhart) and Beck (Hilary Swank) fight to save the Earth in The Core.

Most of the good things about The Core happen in its first hour. For one, it's a relief to find there's no square-jawed alpha male at its center, no ego-flexing Tom Cruise or Mel Gibson "heroes" around. The film starts with a series of mysterious events—people with pacemakers dying, birds crashing into buildings, the space shuttle's navigational system nearly sending it toward a downtown Los Angeles landing—the last two delivered with an appealing, in-your-face sense of mayhem.

The incidents can be traced to changes in Earth's electromagnetic field, and the government starts to assemble a team of troubleshooters around the geophysics professor (Eckhart) it pulls out of a college classroom. The team includes a patronizing "celebrity scientist" (Tucci), an atomic weapons expert (Tchéky Karyo), a reclusive genius (Delroy Lindo) and, once the scientists pinpoint the problem to Earth's molten core, two of the space shuttle astronauts (Swank, Greenwood).

In time-honored sci-fi tradition, the movie's science comes off like a fairy tale. It just so happens that Lindo's character—screwed over by the scientific establishment in general, and by the celebrity scientist in particular—has been holed up in the desert for the past 20 years, developing all the equipment needed to save the world from this unpredicted disaster, including a Gatling-type laser gun that cuts through the hardest rock as quickly as Cuba Gooding Jr. laps up bad scripts.

The crew's mission is to drive a spaceship-like vehicle through the earth's crust, continue through its thick mantle and eventually reach the outer and then inner core. Once there, they will detonate nukes that will get the core spinning again and re-establish the electromagnetic field that protects us from the sun's rays and other potentially dangerous intrusions. The movie's most extreme (and morbidly fun) sequence gives us a taste of what will happen if they fail, when the sun's unprotected rays break through a hole in the electromagnetic field and melt the traffic-filled Golden Gate Bridge. They don't call it "sunny California" for nothing.

Such ludicrousness in a film like The Core is no big deal. The problem is that there's so much ludicrousness, so many life-threatening incidents on the mission, so many death scenes and so many impossible situations that the crew miraculously escapes (phew!). As the little obstacles get bigger and bigger—oh no, the core is less dense than we thought!—The Core comes off like an Apollo 13 that doesn't earn its suspense. It's the sort of movie where, whenever there's a problem, someone clacks a few keys on a computer keyboard and comes up with an answer. As in Apollo 13, we cut between the crew and their handlers back home, but the movie never offers any nuts-and-bolts teamwork, and it certainly doesn't make you feel you're right in there with the crew.

Despite the left-field pedigrees of many involved, The Core loses its way and reverts to Hollywood defaults. Instead of being refreshing, it's just disappointing, and it drags on for more than two hours—making it excessive too. iB

The Core ★★

Directed by Jon Amiel. Written by Cooper Layne and John Rogers. With Aaron Eckhart, Hilary Swank, Delroy Lindo, Stanley Tucci, Alfre Woodard, Tchéky Karyo, Richard Jenkins and D.J. Qualls. Rated PG-13. Paramount Pictures.

Agent Cody Banks ★★
With Frankie Muniz as a junior spy, this works up a big sweat but can't muster a fraction of the cleverness or charm of the Spy Kids movies. This poor knockoff is just a run-of-the-mill spy story, with smaller stuntmen. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

All the Real Girls ★★★
If you thought movie romance had nothing to do with real life anymore, think again. David Gordon Green's tale of the fits-and-starts relationship of two small-town lovers (Zooey Deschanel, Paul Schneider) is down-to-earth and free of formula. With its dreamy blend of pastoral beauty and harsh industry, the North Carolina mill town where they come together and apart feels part of a world where people fall in love and unwittingly hurt each other and nurse broken hearts and try to figure out what to do next. The natural performance of Deschanel (Almost Famous, The New Guy) in her first leading role is terrific. (At Kendall Square.)

Amandla!: A Revolution in Four-Part Harmony ★★★
After all those weak 1990s Hollywood dramas set in South Africa (like Bopha! and Cry Freedom), this documentary about the role of song in South African blacks' civil rights struggle finally gets it right. Lee Hirsch's film is a mix of music, anecdote and political history that's full of insight as well as human joy and suffering. It bogs down a bit in its second half, but this is down-to-earth, living history. (At Harvard Square.)

Basic ★½
When a movie offers an unreliable narrator—as in Auto Focus, Adaptation or Confessions of a Dangerous Mind—the results can be adventurous and exciting. But when a movie itself is shifty and manipulative, it can be annoying. Like Basic. About the best thing you can say for this thriller, in which John Travolta investigates a crime on a military base, is that it's a tad better than The General's Daughter, the groaner that also gave us that premise. This one is cheesily directed by John "I remade Rollerball" McTiernan and culminates in the most unconvincing twist ending since Liza's wedding. Meanwhile, Travolta (who's good here) and Pulp Fiction co-star Sam Jackson (who's not) are onscreen together for all of a minute. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between two cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississippi Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—gets trotted out yet again in director Gurinder Chadha's latest, which can't compare to her Bhaji on the Beach, but which is still involving. Parminder Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, the Indian-English teen with soccer skill and two Sikh parents who won't allow her to pursue such a nontraditional female endeavor. When she's recruited to play for a local women's team, with the possibility of discovery by an American pro team, the scene is set for lots of running around behind her parents' back and comic mishaps—in fact, an awful lot of repetitive running around and mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) and Keira Knightley (as her teammate and sometime rival), as well as Chadra's sense of compassion, help dignity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Kendall Square.)

Boat Trip ★½
There's a bumper sticker that says "Don't assume I share your prejudices." This depressing comedy—about two horny guys (Cuba Gooding Jr., Horatio Sanz) who end up on a gay cruise ship by mistake—assumes its audience would think these characters would feel physically repulsed, and not just uncomfortable, by the thought of a boat full of gay men. There are a few laughs in the second half, mostly from Gooding, but that doesn't remove the foul stench of this comedy's cynical assumptions. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a late Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of this lusty, laugh-filled spoof of the Roaring Twenties, in which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was a great career move, Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jail and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the up-scale shyster with all the answers. All three know just how to manipulate truth, justice and the American way through performance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
The title refers to the Rio de Janeiro slum where the action takes place, as God-forsaken a place as you'll ever find. But the movie is as rich as its setting is impoverished. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets and Amores Perros, as its stories stories crisscross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to somehow get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash that you just can't stop watching. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Dreamcatcher ★★
There are familiar elements in the latest Stephen King adaptation: childhood friends, beasts, snow, pine trees and Maine (though this was filmed in Canada). But the combination is awfully tedious this time around. The friends (Thomas Jane, Jason Lee, Timothy Olyphant and Damian Lewis) are grown now, but their thoughts often trigger flashbacks to when they were boys, and when the retarded boy (Andrew Robb) they befriended gave them telepathic powers. It seems the boy gave the others the powers because he knew they would need them to save the world during an alien invasion. If that sounds farfetched, it comes off a lot better than the clunky dialogue between Morgan Freeman and Tom Sizemore, who play the military men trying to contain the aliens. This one plods along and never gets very interesting. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Dysfunktional Family ★★
Like Eddie Murphy and Martin Lawrence, Eddie Griffin dons leather and goes onstage for the black stand-up comic's rite of passage: the concert movie inspired by Richard Pryor. While this might have been edited down into an amusing half-hour cable special, Griffin's material is too stereotype-dependent to be consistently funny. His emphasis on material about his colorful relatives yields some laughs, but not enough to make sitting through this worthwhile. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Good Thief ★★★
You didn't need last year's infamous mug shot to know that Nick Nolte had tumbled off the wagon. You just had to check out this movie, which like the Nolte films of the late 1980s, gauges his lack of sobriety by the unintelligibility of his words. He hasn't made you say "Huh?" this much since Teachers. But at least it fits the role. Neil Jordan's remake of the 1955 French film Bob Le Flambeur—one of the coolest movies ever made—casts Nolte as the down-and-out crook who goes cold turkey in order to pull one last score while dodging an eager cop (Tcheky Karyo) and flirting with a sweet young thing (Nutsa Kukhiani) he's rescued from the streets. It's hardly a one-of-a-kind movie like the original, but it's sleek, fast-moving and always entertaining. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Guys ★★★
The first movie to directly deal with the Sept. 11 attacks has an appealing simplicity. It's based on the experiences of writer Anne Nelson, who helped a New York fire captain write the eulogies of several men who died in the World Trade Center. Sigourney Weaver plays the writer here, and Anthony LaPaglia the fire fighter. Most of the movie is just the two of them, with the first asking the second about the dead men he worked with. These scenes are somber yet moving, and never over-the-top. If the movie overreaches emotionally, it's in the scenes of Weaver's character writing at her laptop later on, which seem overwrought compared with the more effective scenes with LaPaglia. (Opens March 28.)

Laurel Canyon ★★
If I were a director and had the chance to trade up Ally Sheedy for Frances McDormand, I'd do it in a flash. But I don't know if I'd practically remake my Sheedy movie with McDormand in it. Here, Lisa Cholodenko rehashes much of the plot of her indie hit High Art, in which a naive young woman enters the bohemian circle of an older woman (Sheedy's character). In the writer-director's first film since, the young woman is Kate Beckinsale's post-grad med student, who finds more appeal in her fiancé's free-spirited record-producer mom (McDormand) than in finishing her dissertation after she and the fiancé (Christian Bale) move out west and temporarily bunk with the mother. The retread factor mingles with movie cliches like the doctor who's great at sorting out everyone's life but his own and the parent-child relationship in which the child is the responsible one. McDormand's typically rich performance is the lone bright spot. (At Kendall Square.)

Max ★★★
Writer-director Menno Meyjes offers bracing speculative drama in his story set in Munich following World War I. The title character is Max Rothman (John Cusack), a fictional Jewish art dealer who's embraced the period's modern art. He befriends another war veteran, an aspiring artist—and, it turns out, emerging fascist—named Adolf Hitler (Noah Taylor). Terrifically acted by the two leads and full of crisp dialogue, the movie engagingly addresses the relationship between creative expression, happiness and politics. It also offers the intriguing theory that Hitler might not have turned to extreme politics had he succeeded at art. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

In Agent Cody Banks, junior spy Cody Banks (Frankie Muniz) is sent on a mission to get close to Natalie Connors (Hilary Duff), the daughter of a wayward scientist.

Old School ★★½
The laughs are a little spotty, but it's refreshing to see a "rowdy comedy" that's full of genuine characters, and not just male and female caricatures. Luke Wilson, Vince Vaughn and Will Ferrell are the three buddies in a personal and professional downward spiral who end up becoming big old men on campus when one moves back into their old college's neighborhood and they end up starting a new fraternity. The three stars all get their laughs, the supporting cast is colorful (from Andy Dick to Craig Kilborn) and the movie never pretends to be more than dumb fun. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Spider ★★½
David Cronenberg has made plenty of weird and wonderful movies, from Scanners to Naked Lunch. But his latest is only weird and so-so. He dives into the human psyche again in this London-set story of a mental patient (Ralph Fiennes) who reflects on his childhood through flashbacks in which he's an unseen observer of his doting mother (Miranda Richardson), pub-crawling father (Gabriel Byrne) and his Oedipal 10-year-old self (Bradley Hall). Patrick McGrath's script, based on his novel, visually likens our memories to jigsaw puzzles or spider webs composed of countless, joined pieces—but after getting increasingly involving, the film disappointingly culminates in a resolution that merely says "crazy is as crazy does." (At Coolidge Corner Theatre.)

In Volker Schlondorff's film, a woman joins a terrorist group because of her lover's influence. After the movement falls apart, her past catches up with her as the Berlin Wall crumbles.

• April 14, 7pm. Die Terroristen! (The Terrorists!) 1992. Philip Gröning's film follows bourgeois terrorists who are motivated by a prospective vacation rather than political conviction.

• April 15, 7pm. Germany in Autumn 1978. Eleven filmmakers and 13 writers created this docudrama that chronicles the 44 days in 1977 between the kidnapping of industrialist Hanns-Martin Schleyer and the suicides of Andreas Baader, Gudrun Ensslin and Jan-Carl Raspe. • Also showing, 9:30pm. Marianne and Julianne 1981. Director Margarethe von Trotta's film explores the relationship of two sisters, one the editor of a progressive feminist journal and the other a jailed revolutionary. It is based on the story of Gudrun Ensslin, a member of the terrorist organization Baader-Meinhof, and her sister Christine.

World Melodrama

• April 2, 7pm. All About My Mother 1999. After a single mother loses her son in an accident, she seeks solace by exploring her past. Director Pedro Almodóvar explores gender and role-playing as the grieving mother reunites with her son's transvestite father. • Also showing, 9pm. Matador 1985. Almodóvar's black comedy links the lives of an injured female matador, a conniving lawyer and a young religious fanatic. The story examines issues of obsession, death, religion and the darker sides of human nature.

• April 9, 7pm. Spring River Flows East 1947. Considered the Chinese equivalent to Gone with the Wind, directors Zheng Junli and Cai Chusheng tell the story of a schoolteacher in 1930s Shanghai who leaves his wife and family to join the Red Cross in the fight against the Japanese invasion.

Museum of Fine Arts

New Korean Cinema

• April 4, 6pm; April 5, 5:30pm. The Isle 1999. In Ki-Duk Kim's disturbing, sexually charged film, a fugitive on the run falls for a mysterious mute beauty along a remote lake in South Korea.

• April 4, 7:45pm. Chi-hwa-seon (Painted Fire) 2002. South Korean director Im Kwon-taek follows the story of a rebellious 19th-century painter who becomes an outcast in moralistic Korean society. The story explores the artist's attempts to fight censorship and constraints on personal freedom.

• April 5, 3:15pm; April 11, 5:45pm. Take Care of My Cat 2001. Jeong Jae-eun's film about class conflicts follows five post–high school aged women in the run-down city of Incheon. Their friendship is tested as they enter into new stages of their lives.

Words on Fire: Films Curated by the Boston Jewish Film Festival

• April 5, 7:30pm. The Tramp and the Dictator 2001. Film historian Kevin Brownlow and German television writer Michael Kloft explore the commonalities between Charlie Chaplin and Adolf Hitler, including their mustaches, birthdays, difficult childhoods and artistic aspirations.

• April 12, 7:30pm. The Great Dictator 1940. Charlie Chaplin began filming this feature at the beginning of World War II. The humorous film was the only one of its time to criticize fascism in Europe and the treatment of the Jews by Hitler.

Engagements

• April 5, 1:30 pm. Queen of the Gypsies, a Portrait of Carmen Amaya 2002. Documentary filmmaker Jocelyn Ajami chronicles the life of legendary Spanish flamenco dancer Carmen Amaya.

• April 8, 12:30pm; 10, 5:30pm. Werckmeister Harmonies 2000. An outsider helps a remote Hungarian village whose residents battle alcoholism, loneliness and a bleak landscape. Director Béla Tarr is present for both screenings.

• April 10, 8:30pm; April 12, 5:30pm. Touching Lives: Portraits of Deaf-Blind People 2002. Narrator Susan Hajjar, a woman with three deaf-blind siblings, takes the viewer into the worlds of five deaf-blind individuals and explores their families, communities, jobs, hopes and frustrations. Myles Gordon directs.

• April 11, 8 pm. Touched 2003. Laurel Chiten's film features people who claim to be alien abductees. The director and John Mack, Harvard psychiatrist and researcher of this phenomenon, are present for the screening.

Museum of Science

Mugar Omni Theater

• Opens April 4-Sept. 30. Pulse: A Stomp Odyssey. Travel from New York City to the American Southwest, Africa, South America, Asia and Europe with percussion artists from Stomp.

Filmmakers Open Studios 2003

Filmmakers Open Studios is a free, annual citywide event April 12 and 13 that invites visitors behind-the-scenes of the film and video community. For more information and a complete listing of events, visit www.filmmakerscollab.org. Some of this year's highlights include:

• April 12, 10am-5pm at the New England Institute of Art and Communication. Teja Arboleda and Tim Jackson screen parts of their new works and discuss the process of collaborative filmmaking. • Also showing, 10am at Video Transfer Inc. 2nd Annual VTI Short Film Festival. A number of short films are screened throughout the day. The audience selects one film as the "Best of Show." VTI then works with the winning filmmaker to produce a DVD of the filmmaker's reel. • Also showing, 1pm at Coolidge Corner Theatre. Balagan Experimental Film and Video Series. • Also showing, 1pm at Boston University. B.U. students screen their short films; a Q & A with the directors follows.

SENIOR STATESMAN

Tenor titan Sonny Rollins combines meditation and improvisation at the highest level

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

On the eve of the current war with Iraq, tenor sax giant Sonny Rollins couldn't help but broach that subject.

"People resent rich countries," says Rollins, who watched the destruction of the World Trade Center from his apartment only six blocks from Ground Zero. "If you're rich like we are, walk softly and carry a big stick, OK, but walk softly. [President Bush] is turning people off with his style, and the guys around him, they've had this plan for a long time which has to do with taking over the Middle East, and has nothing to do with 9/11. So that doesn't bode well."

Rollins, who waded into sociopolitical waters with his 1958 work Freedom Suite's call for African-American human rights, is himself best known for walking softly and carrying a big tenor. He retains a soft-spoken modesty for someone widely called the greatest living improviser, or as a 1995 Village Voice cover story put it, "The Last Jazz Immortal."

"I have to face my maker one of these days too," Rollins, 72, says from his upstate New York home. "I've tried my best. That's all we can do."

For Rollins, who performs at Berklee April 12, his "best" continues to impress those who witness his spiraling, thematic solos onstage. As critic Gary Giddins once noted, "Rollins has been seriously challenged by only two saxophonists. John Coltrane briefly, and himself eternally."

Sonny Rollins displays his legendary improvisational style at Berklee Performance Center April 12.

"Regardless of what my audience thinks, I still have my standards," Rollins says. "I consider myself like a work in progress, whereas people might look at me and say, 'Oh, this guy is a jazz legend.' I'm just a guy who's still trying to get to the music that I hear, that I haven't gotten out."

His latest CD, 2000's This Is What I Do, earned Rollins his first Grammy Award, and suggested he may have turned a corner in recapturing his magic in the studio. "I'm getting back to being able to think about the music and block out all of the other things, and it took a while to get back to that point," says Rollins, who made a rare studio foray into the rock world in 1981 with his robust solo on the Rolling Stones' "Waiting on a Friend."

The truest example of his brilliance, however, remains his live improvising, which he still prepares for through daily practice of rudiments. "It's like learning the alphabet," Rollins says. "I'll have all of these letters in place, and I put them together when I'm improvising to form words."

"It's ahead of the mind," he adds. "You've got to think about what you're doing up to a point, then the music takes over. The greatest aspect of playing is when the music plays itself. When I'm really playing, my mind is gone. The music is just coming into me rather than me trying to get proactive about it."

One thing that Rollins has been proactive about through the years is setting the conditions for his art, regardless of the music industry. Following late-'50s classics like Tenor Madness (with Coltrane) and Saxophone Colossus, Rollins took two years off, often practicing on the Williamsburg Bridge in New York, before returning to recording in 1962. Seven years later, he took another sabbatical, exploring yoga and Buddhism, and not playing for two years.

"I still have my ways of communicating with the spiritual element," he says. "When I'm practicing my horn, that's really meditation for me, because I was never able to block out thoughts. I still do certain [relaxation] postures and deep-breathing exercises, which dovetails into playing."

Rollins came into the world in the right place, growing up on Harlem's bebop scene in the '40s, digging Charlie Parker and playing with Bud Powell and Miles Davis as a teenager. His parents had Caribbean roots, which might also explain Rollins' affinity for calypso rhythms in tunes like "St. Thomas," "Don't Stop the Carnival" and his newer "Salvador."

"I heard a lot of other stuff when I was young too, but I was exposed [to those rhythms]," he says. "It's something relatively easy and natural for me."

It also plays to his recent preference for steady rhythmic support beneath his rich, melodic flights. "I like to have a set piece of music and then play against it," Rollins says. "I like it to be there, so the contrast can be established."

At Berklee, drummer Jack DeJohnette will provide the rhythms alongside regular Rollins sidemen Clifton Anderson on trombone, Bob Cranshaw on bass and Kimati Dinizulu on percussion, though pianist Stephen Scott will miss the date.

"I have a lot of stuff I want to do," says the saxophonist, who is honing material for another CD. "I don't feel by any means that I've gotten the whole Sonny Rollins story." iB

Three Petes

Vertigo's new not-quite-dance night

Peter Ellis spins at Analog Lounge at Vertigo with DJs Pete Yagmin, Special Pete and one non-Pete, Greg Blake.

Behind the DJ, a crowd hurries past the enormous plate glass windows of the Vertigo Lounge—State Street is surprisingly busy at midnight on a Wednesday. A well-dressed throng heads into the Exchange for a hip-hop night, a few businessmen spill out of nearby bars and psy-trancers and lounge-goers alike slowly stream into Vertigo. Downstairs, awash in Day Glo colors and blacklight, the Vertigo dance floor is packed with psychedelic trance fans gyrating to the insistent beats of an old-school desert rave soundtrack. Upstairs, the Vertigo Lounge offers a completely different world, having undergone its weekly transformation to become Analog Lounge.

Analog Lounge bills itself as an "oasis," a laid-back, Wednesday-night happening where all sorts of folks gather to hear some of Boston's best underground DJs in a plush and relaxing atmosphere. Resident DJs Greg Blake, Special Pete, Peter Ellis and Pete Yagmin (that's right, three of the four resident DJs are named Pete) spin alongside local guests every week. "I think that what sets Analog Lounge apart is the vibe," says Peter Ellis. "We have a great scene where people come to just sit back for a few hours, chat with friends and enjoy the music."

The music may be mellow, but it always packs a four-on-the-floor beat. Listeners might hear anything from deep trance to progressive house. "There's no dance floor, so no one is waiting for some dramatic breakdown where the air completely explodes in deafening music and flashing lights," says Ellis. "What makes me happy, as a DJ, is to see one, two, five, or however many people getting down to the music. I know that not everyone is going to love every record, but it absolutely makes my week when I can look down the bar and see some guy or some girl that I haven't seen around before, sitting there sipping a martini and moving their body to the beat."—Daniel Spurling

Analog Lounge, upstairs at Vertigo, 126 State St., Boston (617-723-7277). Wed., 10pm-2am. $5. No dress code. 21+.

Tickets are $40 at the door (if available) Please call 617-859-1400 ext. 323 for more information and to purchase tickets in advance for $35

100% of the proceeds from this event will be donated to The Leslie's Links Ewings Sarcoma Fund at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. For more info e-mail wendy@leslieslinks.com.

LESLIE'S LINKS was founded in 1999 by Leslie Semonian who battled cancer and passed away in December of 1999 at the age of 32. During the eight and a half year period of her illness, until her death, Leslie never allowed cancer to stand in the way of her goal of helping others. She knew how precious life was and energetically embraced each day. She helped others to appreciate their own lives more. She wanted to be remembered as a participant in life, not an observer. Her passion was boundless, and will continue in the hearts of the many friends and people whom she inspired.

Leslie's Links is a fund at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute which raises money for Ewings Sarcoma Cancer Research in various ways. One of which is through the Leslie's Links bike team associated with the 192-mile Pan-Mass Challenge bike-a-thon from Sturbridge to Provincetown. Leslie's Links has raised over half a million dollars since its inception in 1999.

Coffee at Panificio

A few months ago, I was walking past Panificio on Charles Street, when I noticed you (6', mid-20s, light brown hair, navy jacket) sitting by the window drinking your coffee. I couldn't resist the urge to leave the cold behind and sit next you. My heart began to race, but before I could gather my nerves and introduce myself, you were out the door and disappeared around the corner at CVS. I have returned several times, but only to find disappointment. Fast-forward to a recent Saturday on Charles Street. Imagine my surprise as you walked right by me. You were engrossed in a conversation or else I would have taken advantage of the opportunity. Is she your girlfriend? Please e-mail me.

To Bobby from WEEI

I met you at the Big Easy Mardi Gras party on March 7. You were with your brother. We danced most of the night. I was having a great time and my friends and I were following you to the after-hours party. I lost you by accident somewhere on Route 93. I never got the chance to give you my contact information. I tried calling the radio station but had no luck. I hope you see this and e-mail me. I would love to see you again.

Looking for Mr. Bubbles

We met at Ned Devines on the Saturday before St. Patrick's Day. You were wearing a Mr. Bubbles T-shirt and were at a fantasy baseball meeting with your friends. I showed you my shamrock socks. You shared your chicken fingers with me. You talked to me when my friend was in the bathroom. After a great start like that, how could you leave without asking for my number? If you are friends with someone who you think could be Mr. Bubbles, please show him this. If you are Mr. Bubbles (Dan), please write.

To the Lunch-Line Idiot

Hi, jerk! I was the guy behind you in line at Sebastian's in the Financial District on Feb. 18. I watched you give a confusing order to the poor Guatemalan girl making your lunch, then berate her for not somehow divining that what you told her you wanted wasn't really what you wanted. While she tried to make it right, you spent the next five minutes snarling that people like her were the reason that America was in decline, to the incredulity of the rest of us. You made such a pathetic display that the manager sent her in back and probably fired her. You were a little bald guy wearing a suit, utterly convinced that you were a higher life form than everybody else. I just wanted to let you know that at least four of us in line behind you agreed that you were an insensitive ass. We swore a lunch-line oath that we would go back to our workplaces, describe what you look like, and initiate a verbal chain letter to tell everybody what a completely reprehensible guy you are. I hope your lack of empathy is a terminal condition.

Caroline

Your name is Caroline and I met you while traveling in New Zealand a little over a year ago. I caught a ride with you and a friend on the North Island, but I had to get to Christchurch so we parted ways. I was hoping to meet up with you in Fiji, but I didn't hear from you. I remember you said that you were from the Boston area. Now I'm living out here, so if you remember me and you read this, e-mail me, I'd like to talk to you again.

Hatless and Hating It

To the frickhead who stole my blue Columbia hat after Lord of the Rings at Loews Boston Common in February: If I ever see you wearing that hat—my most favorite and sole hat of the past four years, the hat which has accompanied me on many ski trips and sheltered my head from rain, snow, cold, wind and a concussion—I will rip it off your head. May your unctuous deed bring you years of unhappiness and may the heavens smite you with an incurable case of scabies and premature balding. Go to hell. Love, Sabs.

To Pete ("The Better Man")

I read your rather scathing outcry in last month's IMPROPER. Quite frankly it made me a bit angry at first, but then it made me truly think about the situation, so allow me to retort. While you are busy yelling about how you are the "better man" and how my "15 minutes of fame are up," you are forgetting one thing: Your wife is not a trophy prize and it was never a competition. She was, or should have been, already yours. Why was she looking for a better prize? Admittedly I am no Tom Cruise (I had to laugh at your Fire Marshall Bill comment—good one). I am not rich, nor lucky, nor beautiful, nor witty—OK, maybe a bit. So why was I there? A mere distraction I may have admittedly been, but I was there nonetheless. Contrary to what you may think, this small encounter was not an endeavor solely my own. I feel bad about what I did and you have every right to be pissed off. I misunderstood the situation and was a bit misled myself. One e-mail does not a story tell and you may wish to think a bit more about your own trophy. I'm glad you still "stand a chance," unlike myself. But then again, should I stand a chance? I never said "till death do we part" to anyone. So it makes me wonder, what did you win again ... "better man"?
—A punk from Southie

Dearest Lanette

I saw you on the volleyball court and could not help but notice your smile, your laugh, or the sparkle in your eyes. Though I cannot forget you, you may not remember me. I'm active, fun and entertaining. I am a bit smug... confident but humble. I love to laugh, especially at myself. I believe that the simple things in life are precious and should be enjoyed. Hopefully you are looking for fun and a possible future. A relationship should be fun, exciting, and comfortable. Every day, I want to feel a spark and leave you wishing for more time together. Anxiously awaiting,

Calling on a Good Samaritan

Lost in the North End: a silver and gold Movado watch with black face on March 17, sometime between 7 and 8pm between Hanover Street and Haymarket T station. Or it may have fallen off on the D train on the Green Line. It's very sentimental in value. Please contact me if you find it. Thank you!

John Visiting Killington

We met on Feb. 22 during happy hour at the Pickle Barrel in Killington, Vt. You are John, the commercial real estate broker who works in Boston and lives near the intersection of the Mass Pike and Route 495. I work for or of your clients in Wayland in the same building as Moldflow and had an instant camera that night. We have pictures of each other. I was disappointed that w didn't have the chance to finish our conversation later that evening. I'd love to hear from yo

Rockie Horoscope

APRIL 2 – 15, 2003

ARIES MARCH 20-APRIL 19

The annual new moon in Aries can be motivation to start a brand new project or set off on an adventure that'll take you someplace you've never been before. Words of love don't necessarily fit into this plan, unless they echo your Mars ruler's time-honored mantra: Make love, not war! However, since the strong-willed sun is at odds with strong-armed Mars, sweet romance probably isn't in the cards. Better to use decisive Mars' trip through your ambitious Capricorn midheaven to advance your career while you can.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Both the fired-up and the frisky, wallow-in-the-mud-bath variety of Bulls can experience a sudden change of heart this week. Don't be surprised if the thunderbolt strikes while your magnetic Venus ruler and unpredictable Uranus meet, thereby thrilling you to the core of your being. These magical moments may have occurred before, but not in romantic, poetic Pisces and not in your lifetime. Other changes will follow: for example, a run of good luck when Jupiter turns direct on the 3rd.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

The high-spirited Aries new moon might introduce you to a whole new social scene, made up primarily of movers and shakers instead of the dreamers and drifters you tend to gravitate to. However, visionaries could still have a major, albeit unexpected, impact on your career. Lots of "It came out of the blue, I had no idea!" declarations, even as you figure out just how the times are changing. Is that so you can rewrite the small print? Jupiter's forward flip on the 3rd should bring more luxuries and greater mobility.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

The first new moon of the new astrological year in your Aries midheaven is always significant. For June birthdays, the moon-sun merger supports lucky Jupiter in your Leo money house. Rewards for a job well done? For Moon Children born in July, this new moon may extend your presence on the world scene or, if you're not careful—and impulsive Aries energy rarely is—expand your waistline. Either way, you'll become more passionate about something that reaches a climax about the time taxes are due.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

If you've been waiting for confirmation or a favor you're due when the fiery Aries new moon rewards lucky Jupiter in your sign, relax. Good fortune takes many forms, and what seems like a crappy situation now could turn out to be a blessing in disguise. Once enthusiastic Jupiter goes direct on the 3rd and its four-month sabbatical in retrograde ends, there'll be many more opportunities for personal and professional growth. You won't feel overwhelmed or stuck in a rut any longer.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

The Finger of God moves in mysterious ways. It may take a while for the fog to lift before you find out what the Aries new moon has planned. Making an adjustment, for sure; probably in a joint financial matter or, if you were born after Labor Day, in a significant relationship. For a change, your talents are recognized and encouraged, rather than taken for granted. But, because the benefits are not immediately apparent, you might not give the opportunity that does pop up your best shot. Mistake.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

The spring equinox may have blown away the winter blahs, but it's the red-hot Aries new moon that'll fuel a new/renewed romance. Or, if love isn't in the cards, another passion, a different partnership you can sink your teeth into, will develop. Aries energy can also provide the courage to drop out of "martyr" mode, a role you tend to take on while your Venus ruler is in sacrificial Pisces. That transit ends on Easter Monday, but you could toss the latest cross you're carrying by the Libra full moon on the 16th.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

This lunar cycle activates either your house of recreation, romance and risk or the dues you owe the universe for the life you've been leading. In other words, the health, work and service sector of your chart. Because it's Aries energy, you're apt to be more physical, more enthusiastic about ordinary daily activities. A chance to expand your horizons, to validate a learning experience appears once protective Jupiter turns direct on the 3rd. It's had your career on hold since early December.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

The Aries new moon beefs up the flames of a dying fire; it's the tonic you sip to spring into action. So what happened on April 1, other than dumb tricks and bad jokes, can determine how you fare for the rest of the month. As an extra added attraction, this week your Jupiter ruler faces forward after four months of not paying much attention. It'll take some time to get back on track, but prosperity could well be around the corner, once Jupiter turns it. Nonetheless, you'll soon feel like your optimistic self again.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Once again, a matter involving the entire family moves to center stage as the Aries new moon in your domestic domain kicks off another cycle of action and reaction. Hope that it's about something other than the problem that's been dominating family discussions since spring began and chatty Mercury entered Aries. But this week, it's your personal courage that urges the matter be resolved, once and for all. The same "blood and guts" attitude—Mars in your sign—can also lead to a surgical nip here, a tuck there.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

A fresh start is what you should be aiming for; if it concerns a money matter, taking a class or a trip, so much the better. While you have the energy of an adventurous Aries new moon spurring you on, why not use it? If you're in a relationship that's been stagnant since December, you'll be pleased when retrograde Jupiter in your house of partners comes out of its stupor and turns direct on the 3rd. Happy days may not be here again for the nation, but for you personally, whoopee!

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

At a certain point the transition you're currently in will end, but who knows when? Once you're convinced that your obligation to home and family has been discharged (Saturn in Gemini) and that the reinvention of your reputation is taking place (Pluto in your Sagittarius midheaven), you'll be free to color as far outside the lines as you like. But until that totally liberating day, absorb the Aries new moon energy and be glad that you'll get lucky again when Jupiter goes direct on the 3rd.

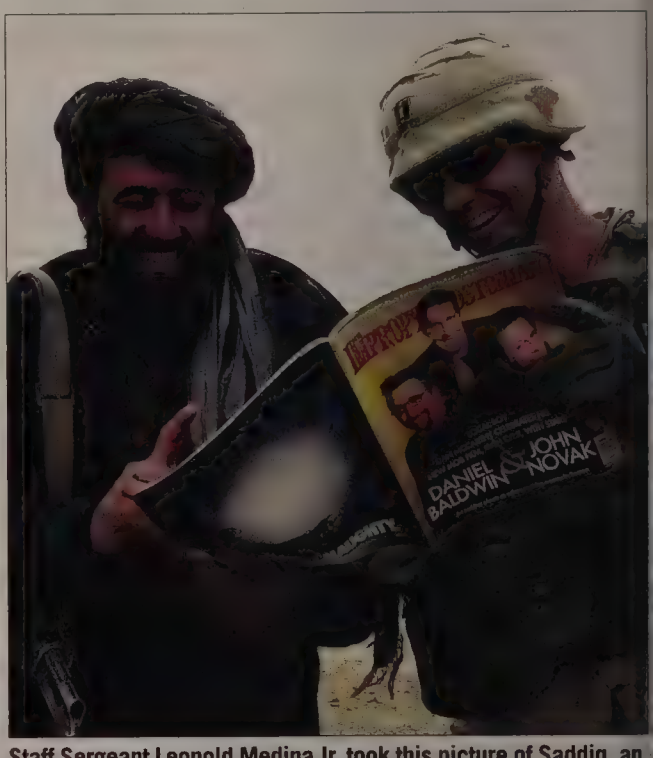
Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading The Improper Bostonian and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

UK members of Parliament David Cairns, M.P. Scotland, and Kevin Brennan, M.P. Wales, discuss spring fashion. Looks like someone's been shopping at Thomas Pink.

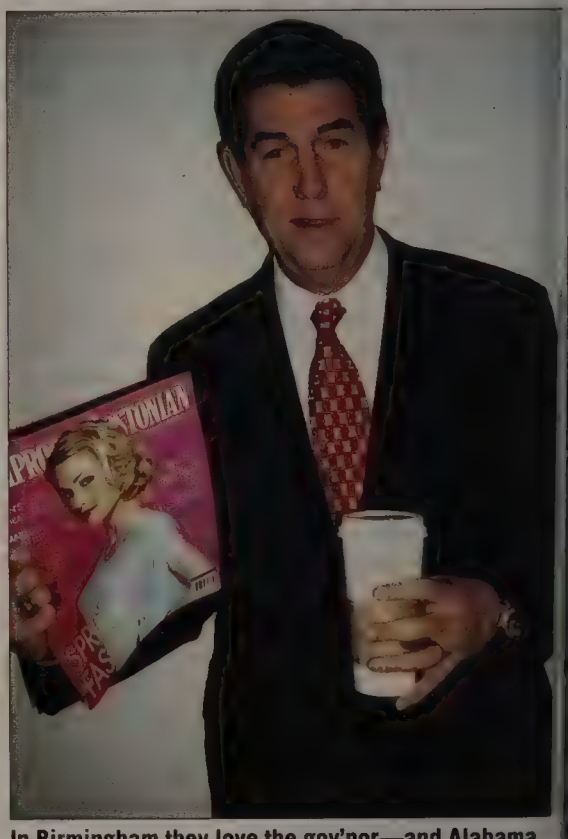
Megan Jalbert and Josh Kivela check into the Ice Hotel in Quebec City. In the1990s Warren Buffett added Ice Hotel Inc. to his holdings, but he sold it at a loss after a disastrous attempt to expand the franchise to Miami.



Staff Sergeant Leopold Medina Jr. took this picture of Saddiq, an Afghan guide, with a U.S. soldier. They're looking in the Impersonals for a note from that cutie on the Afghan Line of the T.

Kevin Noval does a little charitable work in Cozumel, Mexico, teaching fish to read. He's already taught photography to a dolphin.

Alberto Cobos takes a break from the war on terrorism to discuss the Bridal Issue with two groomsmen somewhere in Afghanistan.



In Birmingham they love the gov'nor—and Alabama governor Bob Riley loves his Venti-sized coffee.

PLEASE HAVE YOUR PASSPORTS READY...

It's a small world, after all. In fact, you can fit the whole thing into the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton, judging by Celebrate Education!—the black-tie dinner dance for Unicef where guests were assigned to tables corresponding to different countries around the globe.

The geography was a bit fuzzy, with Egypt located right near Bhutan and Botswana next door to Bosnia and Herzegovina, but it didn't prove to be too much of a problem for such clever folks as charitable stalwarts Lynne and Gary Smith; Brookline yummy mummy Olivia English and her oh-so-suave date, Tracy Gallagher; Back Bay party pair Krystian von Speidel and Nathan Frank; delightful and delicious southern belle Winston Jenkins; gazillionaire fish-monger Roger Berkowitz of Legal Sea Foods; Pulitzer Prize–winning photographer Stan Grossfeld; HVAC moguls Michele and Nancy Kolligian; blue-blooded do-gooder Kimberlea Tracey, and so on and so forth.

Among the more amusing exchanges overheard during the course of the evening:

"Where are you sitting?"

"Cameroon. How about you?"

"Bangladesh."

"Well, I'll come visit...Or maybe not."

AND WHILE YOU'RE AT IT, STOP MOTO ONDOSO...

It may not be the most pressing cause in the world, but conserving the art treasures of Europe's most romantic city is certainly a worthwhile goal, and the Young Friends of Save Venice certainly know how to throw a black-tie hoo-ha.

The 1771 Carnevale party, held at the Algonquin Club, attracted such soigné sophisticates as Meredith and Jeremy Roy; the ever-delightful Mary English; mojito bandito Juan Prieto; super-suave psychiatrist John Sharp and his stunning wife, Elline; statuesque fashion model Hollis Colby; alternative energy magnate Jim Gordon and his gorgeous other half, Meg; Gallic funboy Pascal Aguirre de Navarre; fashion plate and party chair Allison Drescher; lifelong Beacon Hillion Cristina Coletta Blau; City Hall scamp Tony Nunziante; uber-flack Jan Saragoni; Venezuelan playboy Ricardo Jaimes-Branger; the Arnold Hunnewell Jr.'s; MFA curator Frederick Ilchman, and others of their rarefied ilk.

Cocktails accompanied a live and silent auction with all manner of nifty stuff, after which there was a delicious dinner and dancing to Motown's greatest hits, and then everyone went home, secure in the knowledge that the next time the Grand Canal overflows its banks, there'll be someone there to mop it up.

At Le Bal Francais à St. Petersbourg, clockwise from top: Tanya Contos, Alexander Henry and Elizabeth Newman; Elaine Uzan Leary and Suki de Braganca; Aubin Dupree and Samantha Livingston.

WE'LL ALWAYS HAVE PARIS...

Meanwhile, just up the avenue, diehard Francophiles and those who love them were gathered at the Ritz for Le Bal Francais à St. Petersbourg—a gala benefit for the French Library and Cultural Center.

Tout le monde, or some percentage thereof, were decked out in their finest for the way-elegant evening, among them: the oh-so-social Suki and Miguel de Braganca; uber-arts-patrons Hod and Cassandra Irvine; legal eagle David Kozol and his gorgeous blonde French other half, Anna; the statuesque Tanya Contos (wearing family jewels and a medal given to her grandfather by the czar of Russia); her son, Alexander Henry, squiring the scrumptious Elizabeth Newman; naturally carbonated grande dame Marigold Randall; party stalwarts Wat and Jane Tyler; literacy crusader and socialite Vivian Spiro and her art supplies mogul husband, Lionel; the perfectly charming Kargmans, Marjie and Bob; and any number of people who took the invitation at its word and donned Franco-Russian period costumes, powdered wigs and all.

Not surprisingly, several conversations revolved around the absurdity of the recent anti-French backlash in this country.

"How can you hate a culture that gave us champagne and Brigitte Bardot?" marveled one guest.

"And let's not forget," a friend added, "They were willing to take Jerry Lewis off our hands."

THE STINKY CHEESE DEPARTMENT...

If the AIDS Action Committee's fund-raiser had offered a true Taste of the South End, there would've been nowhere to park and guests would've paid north of a million dollars for a coat closet. Nevertheless, the event at the Cyclorama did offer a chance to sample delicacies from various neighborhood restaurants while sipping wine and rubbing elbows with the likes of Harvard Museum of Natural History honcho Philip Lovejoy and his other half, Jim Moses; art dealer Bernie Toale; Channel 5 weather hunk David Brown; musclebound greeting card model Edwin Bradley and studly lawyer Jim Tucker; avuncular broadcasting legend Frank Avruch and the fabulous Bette; theatrical publicist Joanne Barrett; and restaurateurs like Gordon Hamersley, Antoine Delgado of 33, Jack Bardy of Pho Republique and Jeff Gates of Aquitaine.

Overheard near the door: "When you tell someone, 'I just ate the most delicious Stilton,' and they say, 'I know,' it's definitely time to go home." IB

At Taste of the South End, clockwise from upper left: Edwin Bradley and Jim Tucker; Joel Benjamin and Paul Niski; Kevin Joyce and David Brown; Seth Woods.

ON THE WARPATH

It looks like the Firefly won't be on my prospective list for patronage ("Parlez-Vous Freedom," the Word, March 19). Is the help behind the counter ("anonymous") qualified to serve fries in the first place? I quote, "More than half our country is opposed to this war, but we shouldn't direct our anger towards the French." The last time I checked the polls, the U.S. was [at least 70 percent] in favor of military action. In what world does that make half in opposition? Just because 25,000 flunkies can flock to the Boston Common does not mean that's the majority of Massachussets. I'm fed up with liberal non-facts and nonsense. Besides, it's the French that hate us—a British war cemetery was vandalized over there earlier this month. Another reason to detest the unwashed weaklings.

POSITIVE ALTITUDES

Regarding Ezra's column on the Be a Pilot program (March 19): If you want real magic, sometime in the summer fly from Hanscom down to Katama Airpark in Edgartown. It's a little grass strip right on the beach and the ride from Hanscom to the Vineyard at 2,500 feet is wonderful. In a little over an hour you trade the city skyline for the beach (literally across the street from the airport) and an old airstrip dating back to 1928 or so that hasn't changed much since. It's truly amazing how far 100 miles can take you. If a prospective pilot is on the fence, my advice is to jump in with both feet. Taking lessons two to three times a week, you can solo in a few months (20-40 hours is average) and about as many hours again for the license. I don't care who you talk to, be it a Sunday afternoon pilot or a top gun flying F-14s off the Abraham Lincoln, every pilot remembers his first solo like it was yesterday. Truly an awesome experience, and a rite of passage that ties you together with all the great airmen of the past, straight back to Orville and Wilbur. America invented the airplane and remains the most open civil aviation system in the world by far. It is a shame more people do not enjoy it.

—Colin Kingsbury
Via e-mail

Ezra's article on flying was right on! Growing up with my dad, a pilot, I can't imagine myself doing anything other than flying for a career. I got my license as soon as I could (17), but 9/11 has changed everything, and now everybody thinks anyone who flies a little airplane is going to declare jihad. I'm glad that Ezra portrayed general aviation in a positive light, because it rarely is. I'm only 18 and a senior in high school, but I've got about 500 hours and an instrument rating as well as a float plane rating. Ezra should continue taking lessons. It's a blast, and yes, ladies like the pilots.

MELISSA MAHONEY

Melissa Mahoney first developed a passion for photography at the age of 16, and by the time she was 19, she'd shot her first fashion spread. Trips to New York and Paris helped shape Mahoney's style, which makes dramatic use of contrasting light and shadows. She still regularly crosses the pond to France and considers travel integral to her evolution as a photographer. "I love shadows, skin and emotion," she says. "It would be difficult to describe the type of people I like to shoot because it's what I see inside each subject that inspires me." Mahoney's photographs have appeared in the Improper Bostonian and national publications, including Platinum and YM. To see her latest Improper work, turn to this issue's fashion section, "Minis Go Modern," on page 40.

FROM THE EDITOR

STARS IN BARS

Nine years ago the Improper's Jonathan Soroff had an idea for a feature story that would single out the city's best bartenders. Readers loved it, the issue immediately became one of our most popular, and the story became an annual tradition. Nearly a decade later, the fervor hasn't waned. The 2003 ballots—more than 1,000 of them—stacked in a teetering pile on the corner of editorial assistant Jessica Iredale's desk are proof of Bostonians' enduring appreciation for the bartenders who serve them so well.

What drives that appreciation—and what makes for a good bartender, anyway? I took those questions to the experts—the Professional Bartenders School of New England, which, coincidentally, has offices in our building. "Personality is very important," says education director Lou Herbourg. "They must have an ingrained spirit of wanting to help people have a good time, as opposed to just trying to get tips." Herbourg's instructors teach students how to mix popular drinks. But they also teach them about eye contact, about constantly sweeping the bar with their eyes and watching the door to see who's coming in—as well as how to recognize when customers have reached their limit and how to shut them off politely.

Judging by the nomination forms we received and by this year's crop of 34 winners, a bartender's warm smile, attentive and efficient service, and of course, unique personality are what bargoers notice and remember. The men and women behind the bar are not just the hands that feed us but part of the entertainment—and sometimes even the reason we hang out where we do.

For fun, we've thrown a few bar-related sidebars into this issue. To truly show your appreciation for your own beloved bartenders, check our code of bar etiquette (page 28) and follow its commandments religiously.

If you're moved to toast this year's winners as well as the hundreds of other deserving professionals not on our list this year, please join us at the Rack on May 13 for our annual bartenders bash. Watch these pages for details. Cheers!

NEW IN TOWN

Garden Gods

When Bosc opened on Charles Street on Beacon Hill in mid-March, neighbors flocked to the cheery, garden-level home-and-garden furnishings store. It could be because spring fever has seized Bostonians for some time now—we're aching to escape winter's grasp, to walk barefoot in the grass, to pull a weed or two or pluck a tomato off the vine. Or it could be that the name Bosc is familiar to Cape vacationers. (Owners Karen Morrissey, Ralph McLean and John Young own the original boutique of the same name in Kingston Center, on the way to the Cape.)

Whatever the reason, your imagination will run wild as you peruse the patio furniture, stone statues, trellises and bird feeders that fill every nook and cranny of the shop. Picture your grandparents' basement—full of antique furniture (repainted by Young), old lithographs and prints, mirrors and chalkboards—only sunlit, spacious, cleaner and much better organized. Don't miss Young's paintings of Bosc pears hanging on every wall—they look good enough to eat. 82 Charles St., Boston (617-778-6942).—Erin Hagedorn and Julie Short

Back to the Future

Spa-Rific owner Richard Fredericks (who jokingly calls himself the official bottle washer and pot cleaner) recently turned the pharmacy he's owned for 14 years into a '50s-era soda fountain with red leather bar stools, mismatched upholstered seats and tables, a jukebox and an odd assortment of decorations—from an old stand-up hair dryer-cum-lamp to a bicycle covered in neon green fur. One of the only places in town where you can get a vanilla egg cream or a raspberry lime rickey—two of 50 flavored sodas—Spa-Rific also has traditional favorites like steak tips, burgers and home fries, as well as a few updated offerings like grilled cheese on seven-grain bread and a salad bar. Just don't leave without indulging in a thick chocolate frappe. 635 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-566-9088).—E.H. and J.S.

SPORTS

Hot Shots

When the New England Revolution play their first home game of the season April 19 against the Columbus Crew, there will be a major new force on the field: the ball. Made by Puma, the new ball adopted by Major League Soccer this season is dimpled like a golf ball, which Puma says helps create "positive turbulence" and faster shots. While offensive players ought to be overjoyed at this development, there's at least one guy on every team who's not so excited: the goalkeeper.

"The new ball is a lot lighter and has a lot more action on it," says Revolution goalkeeper Adin Brown. "Instead of coming in a straight line, it knuckles and moves at you. And it comes a lot quicker. Where last year's shots were in the 65-80 mph range, I'd say now they're anywhere from 80-95 mph. The guys love lighting me up in practice." Some purists are sure to dislike the dimpled balls, but Brown thinks they'll improve the game for most fans. "With any change in a game, some people like it and some people don't. But this will definitely make the game more exciting. There's going to be a lot more scoring this year."—Ezra Dye

Running on Empty

As the director of nutrition services at SportsMedicine Associates, Nancy Clark's more famous clients include members of the Boston Red Sox and the Celtics. She's published two books, including Nancy Clark's Sports Nutrition Guidebook and most recently Nancy Clark's Food Guide for Marathoners. We asked her what she recommends Boston marathoners should eat after the grueling 26.2-mile run April 21:

"Some people are feeling pretty nauseated after a run and can only handle a glass of ginger ale, while others can eat an entire box of cookies. The body usually wants water and carbs, but sometimes the mind wants champagne—and that's OK. Runners should just make sure they get a lot of fluids. Later on it's important to get a protein/carb combination like potatoes and steak, or spaghetti and meat sauce."

Then we asked a few marathoners what they plan to eat post-run:

- Beth Coughlin: "A sour cream-and-onion bagel with veggie cream cheese immediately after I finish. Some candy would be nice too, and chips. A meal at the Cheesecake Factory would be perfect. Chicken fingers, French fries..."
- Domenick D'Amico: "A frappe from J.P. Licks."
- Dave DeBruin: "I usually have a good steak with mashed potatoes and plenty of gravy."
- Lauren Kisver: "Home-baked treats, a turkey club sandwich from Baker's Best...or lobster, cold Coronas or red wine. Maybe both!"
- Seth Lieberman: "I plan to eat sausage pizza somewhere in a soft chair."
- John Passier: "Pizza and a few beers."

TASTY TIDBITS

•Alfresco Dining... The calendar says yes, but Mother Nature is voicing a chilly no. So why are cafés and restaurants throughout the city prepping their outdoor patios for use? According to commissioner of Public Works Joseph Casazza, the city normally approves May 1 as opening day for outdoor dining but this year moved it up to April 1 to help the restaurant community, which was hard hit by the long winter and slow economy. "Phil Aviles of Masa and Bob Lionette of Garden of Eden bumped into Mayor Menino and he mentioned that he'd like to start earlier, and we cooperated. There's nothing more to it," Casazza reports. Restaurateur extraordinaire Todd English also shared thoughts, "We're a city that's indoors nine months a year, and I think outdoor dining brings life to the street, enhances city the culturally and adds to the charm. Especially after a long, ridiculous winter." Now, just pray for warmth.

•Geoff, Drew, Frog and Toad... Geoff & Drew's Incredible Cookies, an 18-month-old addition to the Boston delivery scene, is making a name for itself on Broadway. Their chocolate-chunk special is the official cookie of the new Broadway production Frog and Toad, which opened at New York's Cort Theater April 13. The cookies are available at all theater concession stands. So how did a Boston cookie-delivery service get connected to Broadway? Drew Koven of Geoff & Drew's says, "In Frog and Toad, there's a song about cookies, and the producers saw our write-up in Gourmet and now we're in business."

•Dining at the Days... Given its neighboring surroundings (IHOP, Martignetti's, Mr. Tux) a Bickford's Family Restaurant might seem the perfect dining addition to the Days Hotel on Soldiers Field Road. Well, Bickford Corp. is in charge, but don't be fooled; the newly opened Tavern on the Charles is nothing like the burgundy clapboard diners that punctuate New England highways. General manager Mark McMahon says, "It's the un-Bickford's," with a more upscale menu offering homemade stuffed quahog, filet mignon and lobster. The average entrée is $16, and the only similarities between the sibling restaurants is the traditional Bickford's breakfast, offered daily from 7-11:30am at its regular low price. 1234 Soldiers Field Road, Brighton (617-782-4391).—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

Back to Basics

•Just a few years ago, Lansdowne Street played host to one of the top underground club nights in North America—Thursdays at Axis. Starting this month, the underground goes back to where it belongs, at Axis, with Square One Thursdays. Square One marks a return to the bare basics of Boston clubbing—no dress code, only a $5 cover charge, no guest lists or radio ads. Resident DJs Ali Ajami, John Debo, Dave Ralph and Michael Whalen will deliver progressive dance music to the masses. On April 24, Square One presents a Deported evening, uniting Bedrock labelmates John Debo and Steve Porter behind the decks for the first time in nearly two years. 13 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2437).

•On Friday, April 18, DJ Matt Fonstein, also known by his DJ name, Tasty, returns to Pravda 116 hot on the heels of a sold-out appearance in early March. Clubgoers can expect Fonstein to take the packed dance floor on a journey out to the tribal edges of progressive house and back again. 116 Boylston St., Boston (617-482-7799).

•The former Cellar dwelling techno party i Cambridge, the Appli ance of Science, re emerges this month o Saturday nights at Rive Gods. Meanwhile, Fri day nights at RiverGod are smooth and easy, a Eavesdrop founder Davi Day takes over the deck to spin laid-back gems o "white soul" from th '70s through today. 12 River St., Cambridg (617-576-1881).

•The eagerly antici pated reopening o Boston's members-only after-hours club Rise ma still be a ways off. In the wake of the deadly Statio fire in Rhode Island, Rise's owners have decided t re-evaluate their renovation plans for the Stuar Street club (which closed after a fire) to ensure tha safety is the top priority. Owners say Rise will in deed return, though the club may be relocated to new downtown location.—Daniel Spurling

INTERVIEW
On the Rise—Rachel Loy

After Rachel Loy penned her single, The Same Man, the ink barely had time to dry before radio stations in her hometown of Austin, Texas, gave it air time. The 19-year-old Berklee student's song is a tribute to a friend currently stationed in the Middle East, and its catchy melody and moving lyrics caught the attention of some recording industry bigwigs. Within a matter of days, Loy was in Los Angeles recording the single with Epic Records. She took a few minutes to chat with us about her newfound glory before her single hits record stores nationally April 22.

IB: Who is "the same man who sleeps with his gun"? Have you spoken to or corresponded with him since you wrote the song?

RL: His name is Matthew Brake. I saw him in early January, and then a week later he shipped off to Kuwait. I assume he's in Iraq now. I haven't actually talked to him, but I've talke to his family about it, and it's so cool because the son has been such an encouragement for them.

IB: Any negotiations on the table with Epic or anyone else?

RL: There's a development deal with my five-piec all-girl outfit, Mass. Ave., that went on the table th same time as my single deal. If the single goes wel then chances are they'll probably want to do a sol album with me.

IB: Where do you think this exposure is going to lead?

RL: Eventually I want to produce my solo album and b a well-known producer and songwriter and in strumentalist. I get stressed out when I thin of financial goals. I just do the music.

IB: So are you ready to embrace fame, or is it back t the books?

RL: The past couple of weeks I've been frie with schoolwork. Berklee has the kind of poli cies that cater to this kind of situation, so I ca take a two-year break and come back with m scholarship. I don't want to ask for a bunch o exceptions to be made.—Jessica Iredale

•Ah, Bach... Although we highlighted the Wang Theatre's production of Jesus Christ Superstar as an IMPROPER Pick in the last issue, we wondered about the decision to cast Sebastian Bach, the former front man for hair-metal band Skid Row who has a history of, um, impulsive behavior, in the title role. Call us prescient, but due to what was allegedly unholy behavior, Bach was unceremoniously dropped from the production. Eric Kunze replaces the headbanger in time for opening night April 16.

•Idolize This... Do today's "How did they get a contract?" performers make you feel like you too deserve a shot at stardom? New England's (nontelevised) answer to American Idol, called NEXT, could be your ticket. Anyone (18-30) who thinks he or she has what it takes can attend auditions at the Improv Asylum on April 24, Virgin Megastore on the 25th or the Place on the 26th. A panel of five judges (including the Celtics' Walter McCarty) will pick 30 finalists, and KISS 108's Billy Costa hosts more competitions to whittle them down. The lucky NEXT New England superstar gets a recording contract with the Musicians Development Institute. www.nextnewengland.com.

•Spacing Out... After six years in Boston, the South End's avant garde art hall, Space 12 Gallery, is bidding farewell to the bustling art community. Gallery owner Greg Shea is closing the space at the end of April. Sad but true. In the spirit of lightening the load, Shea is currently having what he calls an SMS sale—he doesn't want to "store it, move it or ship it," so almost everything in the gallery is 20 to 25 percent off.

•No Way, Jose... 'Tis the season of W-2s and 1040s. Accountants are winding down their busiest time of year and probably feeling a little overworked and underpaid.... Um, scratch that last part. Jose McIntyre's is going beyond the call of duty to make number-crunchers feel appreciated during Accountant Appreciation Week. All accountants and finance workers are invited to present their business cards at Jose Mac's through April 22 and receive a free appetizer. Extra love will no doubt go to those who've secured handsome returns for their clients.

•Match-Up Markdown... It's unanimous: Cheap rent is good; cheap roommates are bad. So we're excited to hear that the oldest roommate referral se vice in the country, Matching Roo mates, is offering a special promotion celebration of its 37th birthday. Owne Al Norton is offering a discount throug out the rental season: Sign up throug September 15 and receive $20 off th regular fee of $85. (617-232-2600 www.matchingroommates.com. —E.H., J.S. and J.I.

Clothes Encounters

Anybody want to buy a pair of Dutch clogs?

You know you're not the snappiest dresser when you wear black pants to work and everyone asks "Going out tonight?" Or when you buy a new shirt and everyone says "Heeeyyy...new shirt!" as if you show up at work wearing a new item of clothing only once or twice a year. OK, so maybe I do show up at work wearing a new item of clothing only once or twice a year. You don't have to call me on it.

A few months ago I took a stab at addressing my clothing situation, buying clothes at three different stores on the same day. When I got home, Roommate Scott informed me that while I was out Fleet called and asked if my debit card had been stolen. I would wager that most people could visit three different clothing stores in a day and not receive a call from the Slob Police, so obviously there was further work to be done.

More recently, I was in western Mass. with Girlfriend Liz, who wanted to stop at the J. Crew outlet in the town of Lee. I decided to kill some time looking around the store while she searched for a pair of trouser chinos in harbor (or, to the non-J. Crew-speaking world, "blue pants"). The next thing I knew, I'd bought a pair of pants for myself. Then I remembered that I was wearing mismatched socks with holes in them, but I could stave off doing laundry for a few more days if I bought a couple of new pairs. Soon I'd recklessly splurged on five pairs of socks and three pairs of boxers, with an additional three pairs purchased by Liz. I told her that my three new pairs were sufficient, but for some reason she insisted on buying me more, with her own money—I think I heard her mutter something about most of my underwear being "disgusting" and "needing to be destroyed." I guess women just love to shop!

Now I was on a roll. Since I started golfing seven years ago I've never had golf spikes. I felt that buying golf spikes would be a poseur move for a guy whose tee shots have been known to land behind him. But if I waited until I was actually good at golf to buy the proper shoes, I'd be wearing my Docs on the course 'til RuPaul gains membership at Augusta. So I marched into the first shoe store I spotted to see if they had any spikes. This happened to be Johnston & Murphy, which had no golf shoes. But they did have a pair of black oxfords in my size for $70, and my current pair is about a year overdue for replacement. I bought them, but now I was even more determined to find golf spikes. I headed for the Reebok store. "I'll go kill some time in Nine West," said Liz. In less than an hour, the male-female shopping dichotomy had been reversed. I'd become the girl.

At the Reebok store I found a $130 pair of spikes on clearance for $40. When I brought them to the register, the clerk informed me that I could get a second pair of shoes for half price, including those in the adjoining Rockport outlet. At first I balked, because I hadn't intended to buy any shoes, let alone three pairs, but then the lure of the deal sucked me in, and I eventually walked out with both my golf spikes and a pair of Rockports that look somewhat like leather versions of those wooden shoes worn by the Dutch. That's right; I bought shoes on a whim. Better watch your back, Imelda Marcos.

To review: I need shirts and pants and I ended up with golf cleats and Ugly Dutchlings. Not only that, the sock purchase might have actually been counterproductive, because I don't do laundry until I run out of clean socks, which takes about a month. Then, after a laundry trip I quickly exhaust what passes for dapper clothes in my closet and wear whatever's available until the next wash day. If I continue to stockpile a sock pile, that means I'll have to go deeper and deeper into my shirt-and-pants roster, until I'm wearing clean socks, acid-wash Jordache jeans and a Hartford Whalers Starter jacket to work. I hope that outfit looks good with my new shoes. iB

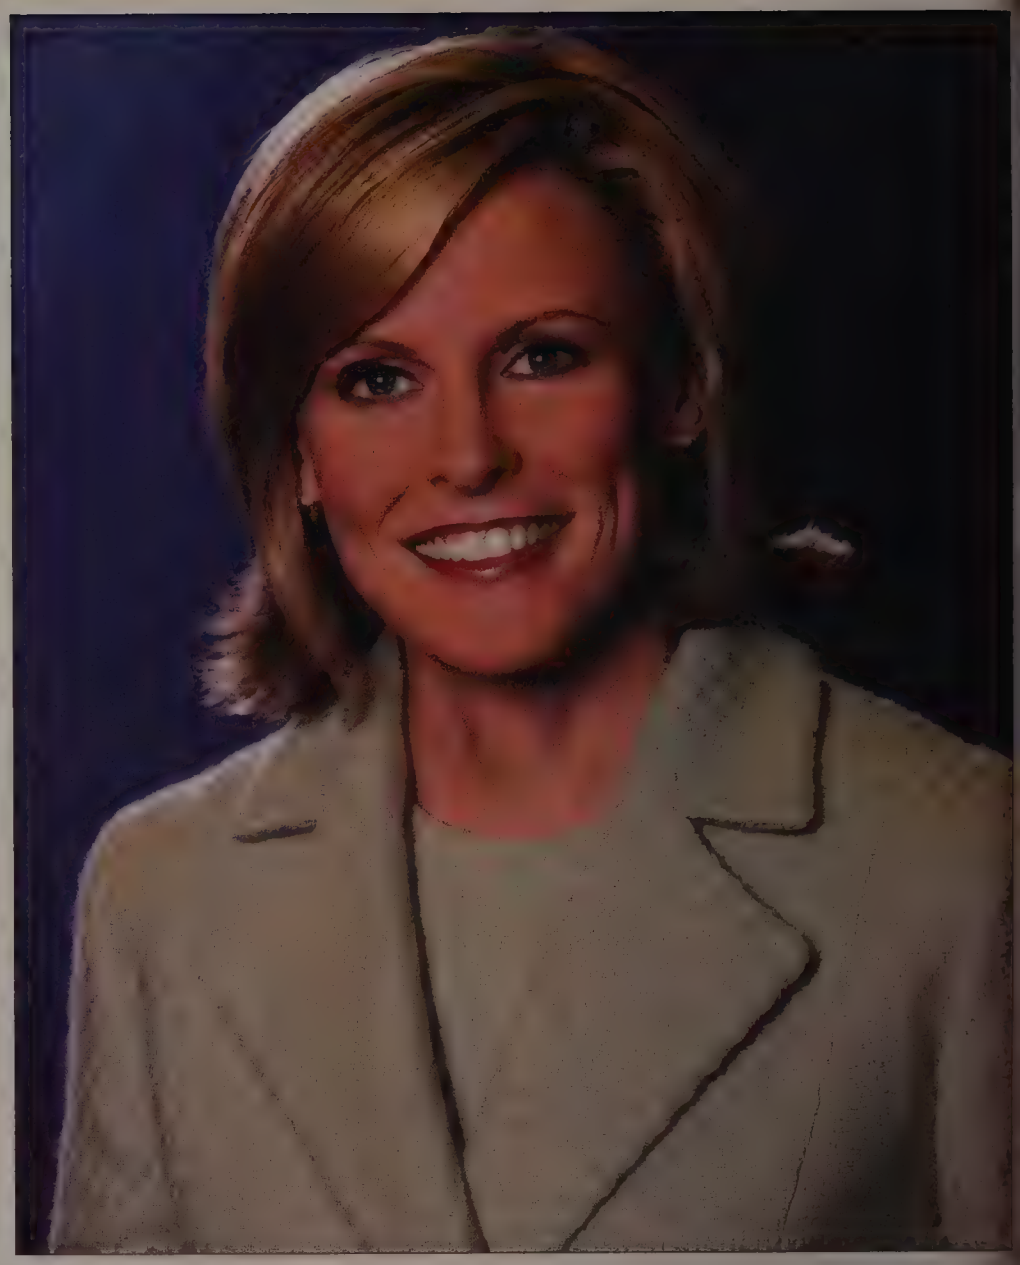
Lisa Hughes

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



WBZ-TV 4 news anchor Lisa Hughes, who helms the weekday 6 and 11pm broadcasts, was born and raised in Moscow, Idaho. She received her bachelor's degree in broadcast journalism from the University of Washington in Seattle, and from 1991 to 1992 worked as an anchor and reporter for KCBY-TV in Oregon. For the next two years, she worked for KBCI-TV in Boise, Idaho, and then joined KIRO-TV in Seattle as a weekend anchor, before joining CBS Newspath, the CBS-TV group's satellite news service. As a correspondent, she reported from Washington, D.C., and overseas, her assignments including the Pope's visit to Israel in 2000. In June of that year, she joined WBZ. The recipient of a 1996 Emmy award for hard news story, she is actively involved with several charities, including the American Liver Foundation, the Boston Adult Literacy Fund and the Boston Public Library Foundation. She lives in the Back Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, Moscow, Idaho. Are you some kind of pinko commie lefty?

Lisa Hughes: First of all, there's no "cow" in Moscow. It's pronounced "Moss-ko." It's a college town. Very earthy.

JS: When you were a little kid, who was your role model?

LH: A little kid? Maybe Wonder Woman.

JS: Because she kicked ass?

LH: She could deflect bullets, and she knew where they were coming from.

JS: What's the worst thing you ever had to cover?

LH: I went to do a story about a group of people whose sewage and garbage had been cut off in the trailer park where they lived because their landlord hadn't paid his bills. Turned out that he hadn't paid the bills because he was in jail for hiring a hit man to torture and kill his ex-wife for running away with another woman. The hit man he hired was an undercover cop. Strangely enough, I remember eating at a Boston Market that night. [Laughs.]

JS: One piece of news you'd most like to deliver?

LH: Scientists have found a cure for AIDS.

JS: One story in history you'd like to have covered?

LH: Maybe the liberation of the Nazi concentration camps. I think I would have been bawling my head off, but what an amazing moment. It's hard to imagine.

JS: Biggest on-air faux pas?

LH: I can't even say it.

JS: Yes, you can.

LH: OK. One time I was tossing to the weather anchor by saying it was a shame that we all had to get up that morning to scrape the ice off the windows of our cars. Apparently, the hand gesture that I made looked a bit like masturbation, and it was just suggestive enough that the sports anchor couldn't keep his composure. When I left the station, on my going-away tape they proceeded to take that clip and just loop it over and over. But at the time it seemed perfectly innocent, and I couldn't figure out why these two guys couldn't stop laughing.

JS: Speaking of which, how do you balance the sunny, smiling on-air personality with telling people about terrible tragedies?

LH: Most of the time, you become immersed enough that you imagine what it would be like to be the person in the story. Then it becomes really sad. There's no temptation to smile at all. Sometimes, on rare occasions, you even have to turn the volume down because it's just too much.

> "IF YOU DIDN'T FEEL SAD ABOUT MANY OF THESE STORIES, YOU'D COMPLETELY LOSE YOUR HUMANITY... I LIKE TO GET CLOSER TO WHAT'S REAL."

JS: So does it get depressing, and if so, what do you do?

LH: I get depressed about it, a little bit. I feel blue when it's over, particularly. But I think if you didn't feel sad about many of these stories, you'd completely lose your humanity. You make a choice: Either you think about them as things that will bring people together, because these are common emotions—sadness, fear and loss—or you choose to ignore them, and I just don't think I could do that. I like to get closer to what's real.

JS: A lot of people think that news anchors just show up, read from the teleprompter and then go home. What's your day really like?

LH: I try to read as many newspapers as possible and know what's going on. I watch the news, especially the noon show. Typically, there might be some kind of public appearance or charity function before, during or after work. I go in at three. We do promotional spots for the six o'clock and the eleven o'clock news. Then we start rewriting and working on scripts, reading them out loud at our desks. After all that, you have to roll with the punches when Plan A goes out the window and there's breaking news, and you just have to deal with it.

JS: Worst words for you to read on the teleprompter?

LH: "Buttocks" and "tuberculosis" are my downfall. For some reason, I can't say them. There was this terrible story about a woman trying to smuggle drugs in her buttocks, and I couldn't pronounce it. With tuberculosis, I just have to say TB.

JS: Who would you rather kiss: Tom Brokaw, Ted Koppel, Sam Donaldson, Peter Jennings or Dan Rather?

LH: Oh, that's easy. Peter Jennings. He's smart and well spoken. I just wish he were a little...

JS: ...less Canadian?

LH: No. A little softer in his delivery. But I've always had a huge crush on him, although it's waned a bit in the past couple of years.

JS: Thing you like least about being on TV?

LH: It's just the nature of the beast, but to some people, you're no longer a person. You're the TV head. And they make assumptions about you, like that you wake up fully made up. They fill in all kinds of blanks, and then when you meet them, you realize you have a lot of work to do to dispel those things.

JS: How about strange encounters with viewers, like someone blaming you for a story you covered?

LH: One man writes me regularly asking me please not to say that we don't want more snow because we should be happy with whatever nature gives us, and by the way, some people do like snow, and he'd appreciate it if I didn't speak for others.

JS: What's your impression of Al-Jazeera?

LH: I think they've given us some idea of how things are reported in the Middle East, so as Americans it's interesting for us to see it. I worry that it's a mouthpiece, and it has such an amazing influence on people, which can be dangerous. But by the same token, what we believe in is freedom of speech, and what we're ostensibly fighting for is to give people a voice. I don't think you can silence a voice, even if you don't like it.

JS: Are you a natural blonde?

LH: I have no idea.

JS: What are the restrictions on your appearance?

LH: There aren't any, really. Consistency is the key.

JS: That's not true. You can't go out and get a tattoo on your neck or have your eyebrow pierced.

LH: OK. But I've never really been tempted to do either of those things. I do have an olive suit that my boss hates, and he made no bones about mentioning it.

JS: Fantasy job after WBZ?

LH: For the first time in my career, I'm not thinking about what's next. IB

BOSTON'S BELOVED BARTENDERS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

The minute you walk in the joint,
You can tell that he or she's a pro of distinction,
A real bartender.
Attentive. Technique refined.
Inexplicably knows what's going on in your mind.
So let us get right to the point:
We don't pop our corks for every one we see.
Hey, bartender!
Here's some hard-earned props for thee.

– To the tune of "Big Spender," with apologies to Dorothy Fields and Cy Coleman

Every year, we publish a ballot that readers use to name their favorites. We canvass the city and network with barflies. We go out night after night, purely for research, and wake up every morning feeling a bit worse for the wear. All to bring you our lineup of Boston's bottle-slinging all-stars.

Anyone with an opposable thumb can open a beer or put ice into a glass and pour booze over it. Even the world's biggest klutz, in the privacy of his own home, can coax a martini out of a cocktail shaker. But try doing that several hundred times a night, for people who expect you to interact with them no matter how objectionable they are. It's not an easy job, and it's that much harder to do with style and finesse.

Some of our picks work at high-end restaurants or ultra-hip nightclubs. Some work at neighborhood haunts or out-and-out dives. All of them are worth visiting, if only because their genius for tending bar makes them a significant draw for the places where they do that voodoo that they do so well.

As always, you will see the faces of repeat winners, the proverbial cream of the crop whose consistency should be applauded. We've also included a signature drink recipe from all the winners, so that even if you never get a chance to belly up to their bars, you can still experience a little bit of their magic. Should you happen to seek out these bartenders in person, though, we ask that you remember three things:

1. Reading about them here doesn't make you their new best friend.

2. If, while standing at the bar, you find yourself thinking you're the funniest person who ever lived, it's time to go home.

3. Tipping is not a city in China.

DANIELLE HARDER

The Place, Wed.-Sun. nights

Petite, pretty and perpetually pleasant, she's a pint-sized pistol who's faster than Speedy Gonzales and more fun than a hula hoop. By day, she studies business at Northeastern University, and she plans to go into advertising or PR upon graduation. For now, though, she pays the rent by ministering to the thirsty hordes at this state-of-the-art sports bar. The crowd is predominantly male, and they generally treat her like a kid sister, joking around and testing out the shots she invents for them to try. Of course, there are a few with amorous intentions, but she never gives out her number. A budding sports fan since she began working there, she's a blur of upbeat energy behind the bar, wearing her trademark shit-kickers to make her 4-foot-11 frame a bit taller. But as Nancy Sinatra might have said, "These boots were made for bartending."

Signature Drink:
Danielle's Remedy

Equal parts Stoli Raspberry, Stoli Strawberry, Stoli Orange and Chambord, with a splash of Sour Mix and Sprite. Shake on ice and serve as a shot, or on the rocks garnished with a slice of lime.

TEODORA BAKARDZHIEVA

Felt, Tue., Fri. and Sat. nights

Like a Bond girl, she has two modes: all business or totally wild. Born and raised in Bulgaria, Bakardzhieva grew up behind the bar of her parents' restaurant in "a town no one's ever heard of," and came to Boston two years ago, at which point she decided to put off her using her finance degree, at least for the time being. Her bartending style reflects Eastern European efficiency and service, done at warp speed and with a seductive accent. Midweek, when things get mellower, she plays psychiatrist to her regulars. On weekends, she's been known to shout, "It's time for a shot!" Unfortunately, we couldn't pry the secret recipe for a Bulgarian Martini out of her, so you'll have to check that one out for yourself.

Signature Drink:
Chocamocha

1 oz. Stoli Vanil, 1/2 oz. white Crème de Cocoa, 1 shot of espresso with a splash each of Godiva Dark and Godiva White liqueur. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass.

TOGRAPHER: FURNALD/GRAY; HAIR: SALLY DRINKWATER AND MELISSA CLARK FOR LORD'S AND LADY'S; CLOTHING: PATTERNED DRESS BY TOCCA LABLE AT SAKS, BLACK DRESS WITH GATHERS AVAILABLE AT DKNY; MARTINI GLASSES: AVAILABLE AT CRATE AND BARREL

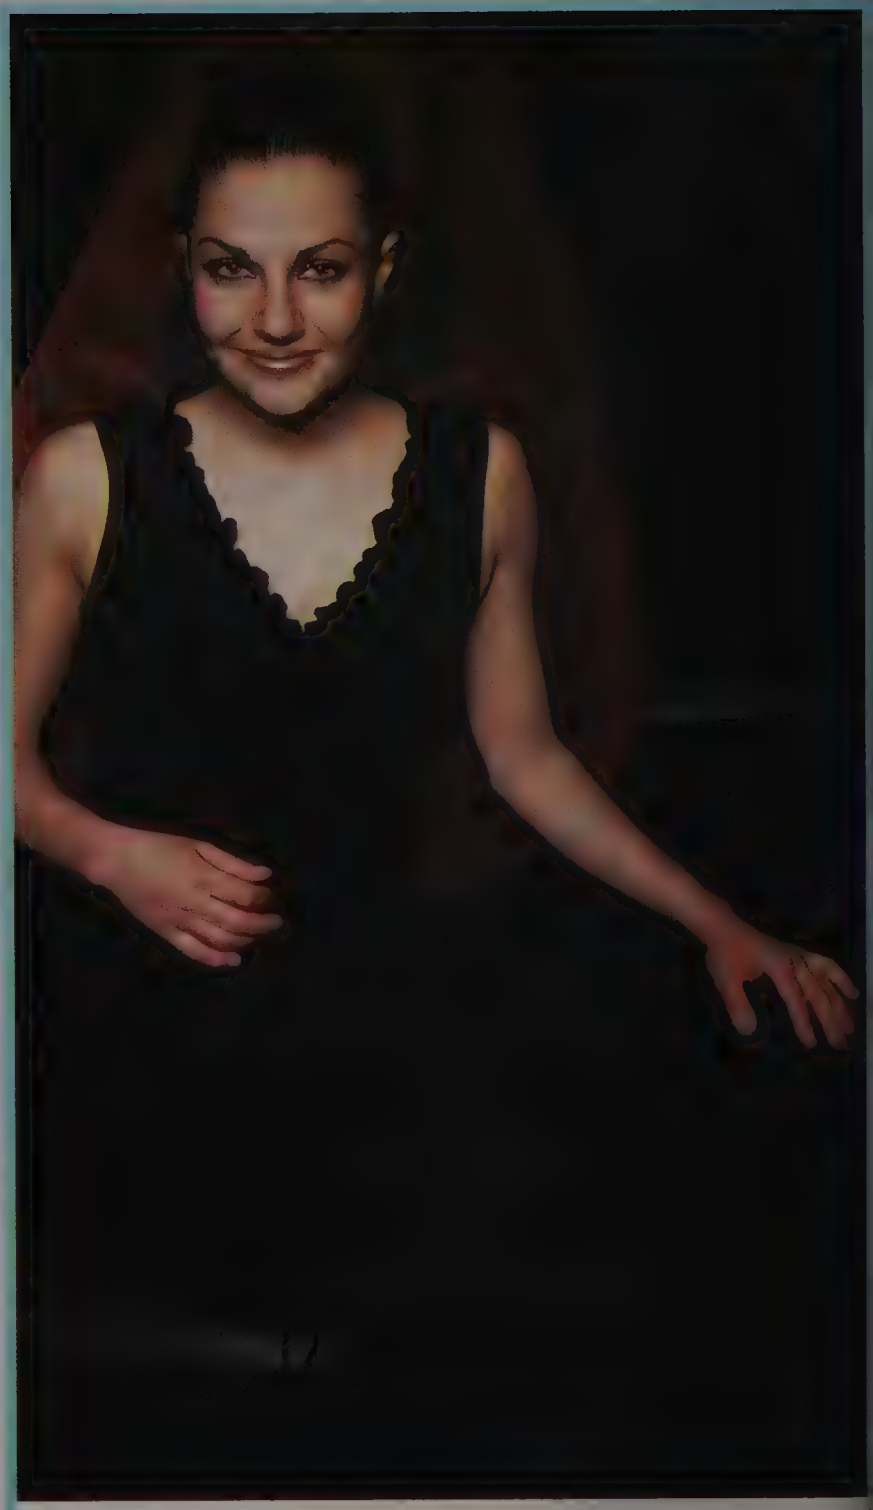
ROB MANNKE

29 Newbury St., Mon. and Sat. nights; Avalon, Sun. night

Anyone who's never experienced his rapier wit or seen the blindingly brilliant smile on his improbably handsome face ought to get out more often. Imagine the model from the cover of a romance novel crossed with the wry butler from a Preston Sturges comedy, and you begin to get the picture. Bartending since he was 16 (his career is old enough to drink legally), Mannke regularly holds court at Back Bay's notorious hangout for the freaky and chic and at Lansdowne Street's eternally sizzling disco inferno for the gay crowd. As quick with a quip as he is with a cocktail shaker, he never fails to light a customer's smoke and has legions of fans who count him among their closest friends. Consequently, they treat his bar as if it were an extension of their own home, and he's not shy about telling them to keep their feet off the furniture. A superfriendly smart-ass, Mannke's attentive without being obsequious, mixes a mean drink and can hold up his end of a conversation, no matter what the subject.

Signature Drink:
Grapefruit Gimlet

3 parts Citron, 1 part Triple Sec and a splash each of Simple Syrup, lemon, lime and grapefruit juice. Shake over ice and serve straight up. Garnish with a slice of lime.



KATY JORDAN

Saint, Wed. and Fri.-Sun. nights

This slickest of new nightspots boasts more than its fair share of outstanding cocktail jockeys, but our readers chose this 22-year-old powerhouse as their favorite. The reasons are obvious. Having attended a high school for the performing arts, she's finishing her undergraduate degree in theater and English, and every night at her bar is a performance worthy of a standing ovation. Although she can hold her own in terms of speed and efficiency, she's really all about personality, wisecracking and telling jokes to make her customers laugh, and growing sarcastic when they start to act up. On a slow night, Jordan's liable to find herself in a deep conversation about philosophy or theology, while on busy nights, she sails through the craziness with a serene smile. Saint's upscale, exacting customers treat her with respect, despite her tender age, because she knows how to handle any situation. If, for example, someone's had too much to drink, she'll quietly suggest switching to water. A three-ring circus in human form, Jordan could sell tickets and there still wouldn't be an empty seat at her bar.

Signature Drink:
Lychee Nut Martini

4 oz. Grey Goose Vodka, 2 1/2 oz. Lychee Nut Syrup and a splash of lime juice. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass. Garnish with a lychee nut.

CASSANDRA ALSGAARD,

Green Street Grill, Thu.-Sat. nights

Currently working toward a master's degree in psychology, Alsgaard has a deep understanding of human nature that comes in handy at this quirky Central Square hole-in-the-wall. Her recipe for success is simple: She treats everyone in the eclectic crowd the way she'd like to be treated. According to one faithful patron, "What Judy Garland did for song, Cassie does for liquor." According to another: "I'm basically a loser, but she makes me feel like I'm not." Approachable and genuine, Alsgaard's mission is to make everyone want to come back (which they do, in droves) to sit at her bar and bask in her warmth. Always ready to lend an ear, she's nonjudgmental and unflappable, even when customers confide in her about hanky-panky like extramarital affairs. What's more, she deflects the constant barrage of come-ons—like the guy who recently said, "You have a red thong. I have a red car. Wanna go for a ride?"—with wit and diplomacy. A consummate pro with charm to spare, Alsgaard is 100 proof and completely straight up.

Signature Drink:
The Guava Explosion

3 parts Grey Goose Citron, 2 parts guava nectar, 1 part Peachtree Schnapps and a splash of pineapple juice. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass. Garnish with a slice of star fruit.

MANNKE, ALSGAARD: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN; JORDAN:TRACY POWE

JESSAMYN GANGI

Sonsie, Thu.-Sun. nights

With a fittingly exotic name, she's a classically trained lyric soprano who studied at the New England Conservatory and is pursuing a career in opera while putting on her own nightly show at this perennial Newbury Street hot spot. "The whole bar is a stage," she says, "and whenever I'm at work, I'm performing." She makes it a point to get to know everyone who comes in and views her primary responsibility as creating a feel-good atmosphere, like being the hostess of an ongoing party. Gangi's co-workers can't find enough superlatives to describe her, and upscale, out-and-about patrons have adopted her as one of their own. Unfortunately, though, with someone this gifted, the opera world's gain is bound to be bartending's loss.

Signature Drink:
The Star Fruit Martini

Equal parts Stoli Orange and Stoli Strawberry, with a splash of Lillet and white cranberry juice. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass. Garnish with a slice of star fruit.

MATT "SPANKY" CALDEIRA

Dick's Last Resort, Fri.-Sun. nights

Like a postpubescent Dennis the Menace, Caldeira presides over the shenanigans at this Prudential Center theme bar where anything goes and getting tooled on by the staff is part of the fun. Patrons tend to fall into one of three categories: Saturday night bachelorette parties, fans of the bands that play there and people who stumble in clueless. All of them are in for a dose of PG-bordering-on-R-rated fun from this shaved-headed wisenheimer who throws napkins at people, gives them unsolicited nicknames and incites general mayhem. He even has a Hunchback of Notre Dame puppet with an anatomical addition through which customers can do shots. Typical misbehavior: One recent night, he kept holding up a "Caution: Snow Falling" sign that he had altered to say "Caution: White People Dancing." Definitive proof of Caldeira's bartending skills: His manager once handed him a bottle of wasabi-flavored liqueur, predicting it would sit there forever. By the end of the night, Caldeira had served the whole bottle.

Signature Drink:
Citron My Face

1 oz. Absolut Citron, 1/2 oz. Grand Marnier and a splash of Sour Mix. Shake on ice and top with Sprite. Serve as a shot.

CHRISTINA VOROS

Mamma Maria, Mon. and Wed.-Sat. nights

When patrons of this cozy North End restaurant find out that she's a Harvard graduate, they often ask, "So what are you doing here?" The answer: supporting a career in writing and acting. Given the sitcomlike atmosphere created by a multiethnic staff (from at least eight different countries), the neighborhood regulars and out-of-towners who are referred by the concierges at their hotels, her job provides her with endless material. It's also second nature to her, since her parents ran a restaurant on Cape Cod. Here, her style is a combination of joker and psychiatrist. Her bar has only five seats, but she somehow has to accommodate all the people who are waiting for tables. "The challenge is to make them enjoy their time at my bar when that's not where they want to be," she says. She does so with flying colors. In fact, she's ample reason to forget about the table and eat right at the bar.

Signature Drink:
Martini di Mele

2 parts Van Gogh Raspberry Vodka, 1 part Sour Apple Schnapps, and a squeeze of lemon and lime juice. Shake on ice and pour into a martini glass. Sink a splash of Chambord to the bottom.

GANGI: TRACY POWELL; CALDEIRA, VOROS: DEREK KOUYOUMJ

SUMMER BRANCOCCIO

Vox Populi, Tue. and Fri.-Sun. nights; La Boom, Thu. night

She's six feet tall, half Chinese and half Italian, beautiful, and not afraid to put on a purple metallic wig when things threaten to get dull. In other words, she's hard to miss and impossible to forget. Born and raised in San Antonio, Texas (the probable source of her spunkiness), Brancoccio came to Boston to study psychology at Boston University and will start working toward her Ph.D. next year. In the meantime, her bar provides field research, attracting the full range of Back Bay residents, worker bees, wannabes and even 8-minute dating attendees. Whether it's a wallflower or a wild-and-crazy guy, she has a joke and a smile for everyone who comes to her bar. "I'm the one dancing and trying to taunt anyone in a bad mood into having a good time." And it works.

Signature Drink:
Summer Breeze

1 1/2 oz. watermelon-infused vodka, 1 oz. champagne, a dash of Tropical Island Pucker and a splash of Simple Syrup. Shake on ice and pour as a shot.

COCCIO: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

THE COORS TWINS

A double dose of bubbly

BY EZRA DYER

Diane and Elaine Klimaszewski, a.k.a. the Coors Twins, grew up in Worcester, the daughters of Polish immigrants. They began performing at age 13, and have appeared in everything from Star Trek: Enterprise (as latex-clad twin aliens) to Maxim magazine. Besides acting and modeling, the entrepreneurial Diane and Elaine have their own clothing line, Zipper Girl, and a band, Klone. They live in Los Angeles.

So how did you land the Coors gig?
Diane: We're entertainers and commercial actresses, and Coors had a nationwide search for twins. They put us on tape, interviewed us, and it went from there.
Elaine: We're self-taught, self-made. We built ourselves from the ground up. The Coors campaign put us on the map and gave us the visibility that we needed. We're not fluff, and we're building on that publicity.

Where do you like to go when you're back in Boston?
Elaine: We don't really know Boston that well, because when we lived in Worcester we weren't old enough to go out to bars. We like Cheers [the Bull & Finch], though.
Diane: [Assuming a thick Massachusetts accent] And every time we land in Boston, we've gotta get the Dunkin' Donuts coffee.

How come nobody cares about male twins?
Elaine: Because it's not a girl fantasy.
Diane: That's not true. Girls love male twins. I saw a commercial last night with male triplets, and I went nuts.

Who are the more rabid groupies, Trekkies or football fans?
Both: Woowwww.
Elaine: I'd say the Star Trek fans. They're weird, but we love them.
Diane: They're two different breeds, but the football fans are more well-rounded human beings.

That's not something you hear every day. You've appeared in Muscle & Fitness and Flex. Who benches more?
Diane: Elaine does.
Elaine: I only do about 80 pounds, but I do lots of reps. Our brother, Mark, is the most effective, efficient trainer. He gets results.

Have either of you done any gigs without the other?
Elaine: Sometimes at auditions they don't want twins and they'll pick one of us, but we market ourselves together.

You two write your own music. What do you think of all the instant pop stars whose songs are actually written by a troll locked in a dungeon at BMG headquarters?
Elaine: I wouldn't mind a troll locked in a dungeon writing me a song!

Diane (right) and Elaine Klimaszewski

Diane: It's not easy. But we're mostly lyricists—somebody else puts together the music.

Where does the phrase "Zipper Girl" come from? I spent several hours scrutinizing your clothing line's Web site, www.zippergirl.tv, and I couldn't find a single zipper.
Elaine: It came from an idea that Diane and I had after doing a promo for The Andy Dick Show. We had zippers on our heads and it was humiliating, but we turned that experience into a positive by using it for our clothing line—and a song.

Has Playboy come knocking yet?
Diane: We're not ready for that yet. They have come knocking, but we're going to make them sweat a bit.

On behalf of all men in the country, do you have boyfriends?
Elaine: We're not lonely, that's for sure.

What type of guys do you like?
Diane: I like the skinny, rock-star type.

Like Chris Robinson?
Diane: No, not that skinny. Like Bon Jovi or Johnny Reznick.

Current Bon Jovi or '80s Bon Jovi?
Diane: Bon Jovi with a haircut.
Elaine: I like the clean-cut, Wall Street Journal–reading type. We're opposites.

What's Worcester got that Los Angeles doesn't?
Elaine: Less traffic.
Diane: Good God, you can say that again.

MICHAEL RAY

Abe & Louie's, Tue.-Fri. nights, occasional days

"It takes a different kind of person to tend bar," says this 13-year veteran who got bitten by the restaurant bug in college and chose to stay in the business rather than putting his degree in architectural engineering to use. "You have to be open-minded, tolerant. But the payoff is that there's always something new, every day." Balancing the impeccable formal service guests expect from this upscale steakhouse with a sense of mischief that makes sitting at his bar more fun than the proverbial barrel of monkeys, this garrulous gentle giant with a disarming British accent always seems to enjoy himself as much as his patrons do. He considers it his crowning glory that many of his regulars come in specifically to see him, and we concur wholeheartedly. Like the host of a perpetual cocktail party, he keeps the mood light and the drinks flowing, which keeps 'em coming back again and again.

Signature Drink:
Lemondrop Martini

2 oz. Ketel One Citron, 1/2 oz. Limoncello, a dash of sugar, and a splash of lemon juice and Cointreau. Chill and serve straight up, in a sugar-rimmed martini glass. Garnish with a lemon twist.

LISA HOLZIMER

Clarke's at South Station, Tue.-Fri. nights

Bars in train stations tend to be either too scary for words or strangely fabulous. This turn-of-the-century saloon inside South Station falls firmly into the latter category, with surprisingly tasty food and an after-work crowd of construction workers, suits and commuters. All of them are instantly acknowledged and almost as quickly taken care of by this wickedly funny human tornado. Whip-snapping quick with the cocktails, she's just as fast with the one-liners, and having grown up in a theatrical family, performing is in her blood. Dressed in black from head to toe, she jokes, "I'm like a mental patient. People say they put me behind the bar to protect the customers." That said, she's never had a martini returned and she never keeps a customer waiting.

Signature Drink:
Dirty Girl Martini

4 oz. gin or vodka of choice and a splash of olive brine, chopped in a glass of ice until extremely cold and cloudy with ice crystals. Serve straight up. Garnish with three fat olives to represent the past, present and future.

DEREK BRADY

The Last Drop (Brighton), Wed.-Sat. nights

A dead-ringer for Clark Kent, Brady turns into Superman behind the bar, cranking out cocktails for the thirsty crowd of regulars (ranging from college students to young professionals) who habitually make a visit to his bar their last stop of the night. It's easy to see why, given his gregarious and outgoing nature. Quick to jump in on conversations, he greets everyone as if they're his long-lost friend, and people invariably think they know him whether or not they've ever met. As a result, this neighborhood bar where everyone knows each other is still warm and welcoming to strangers. By day, he works as the operations manager for an equipment company, which he says is the secret of his bartending success. "I don't really need the extra money or the job," he says. "It's recreation. It's like a hobby, and I enjoy it." So do his regulars.

Signature Drink:
Sexual Alligator

For this layered shot, use equal parts Midori, Apple Pucker and Absolut Citron, with a splash of Sour Mix. Shake on ice and strain into a shot glass. Layer Chambord into bottom and float Jägermeister on top.

BAR ETIQUETTE

Top tips on minding your manners from an industry veteran

BY JONATHAN SOROFF, WITH PETER CIPRIANI

One of my closest friends, Peter Cipriani of Pho Republique and Silvertone, is a world-class bartender. Perhaps this is inevitable, since he shares the same last name as the proprietor of Europe's most legendary watering hole: Harry's Bar in Venice. Cipriani, who has appeared in this issue numerous times in the past, is a consummate pro and an unimpeachable authority on all things bar-related.

While he's a charming, even-tempered man, I can be a bit of a pain in the ass, but he has only ever lost his patience with me once. I was visiting him at the bar where he worked when I decided I wanted a pizza. He was appalled when I ordered a large pepperoni to be delivered.

"But I want to hang out with you, and I want to eat something," I protested.

"I appreciate that," he said, "but first of all, we have pizza on the menu here, and second of all, that's like bringing your own food to a dinner party. You just don't do it."

In retrospect (and with fewer martinis in me), it was obvious that I was rude, and Cipriani was right. He usually is. So we prevailed upon him to help us compile a guide to bar etiquette. Some of these rules might seem obvious, and others are more subtle. Obeying all of them will guarantee that you look as smooth as James Bond to both the bartender and everyone around you.

DO's

- Say, "Hello, how are you?" Bartenders are human too, and they appreciate consideration as much as the next guy—maybe even more so, since so many people treat them like nothing more than liquor vending machines.
- Know what you and your party want before getting the bartender's attention, especially if the bar is busy. Nothing is more annoying than being told to "wait one sec" while your date chooses between a Mai Tai and a Suffering Bastard and a hundred other people are biding their time.
- Understand that tipping will affect your service. If you leave the bartender a decent gratuity, he or she is bound to pay you some extra attention.
- Know what goes into the drink you're ordering, especially if it's exotic. Every bartender wants to accommodate you, but no bartender knows everything, so if you're asking for a Mongolian Motherfer, be able to list the ingredients.
- Understand that bartending isn't charity work. It's a job, and as much as he or she might like to, it's not possible for the bartender to talk to you all evening.
- Flirt with the bartender, if you're so inclined. If he didn't welcome the attention, why would he subject himself to being trapped in a small space with everyone looking at him?
- Know how you intend to pay and be prepared to do so when your drinks arrive. In the time that the bartender mixes a drink, you have ample opportunity to extract a credit card or $20 from your wallet.
- Be the first to offer money if you want to be the one to pay the tab, and don't involve the bartender in any quibbling about it. Arguing over who will foot the bill is a waste of everyone's time.
- Feel free to tell the bartender to decide what you'll drink, but don't send it back if you don't like it.
- Resist the urge to help if you spill or break something. If you cut yourself, it's a problem. If the bartender cuts himself, it's workers' compensation.
- Send a drink back if it's not what you ordered or not made the way you like it. The bartender wants you to enjoy your drink and shouldn't be offended if you ask for more soda or less Vermouth.
- Leave when they ask you to leave. They have jobs, lives and licenses to protect, so if you're not sleeping with someone on the staff, get out when they tell you to.

DON'Ts

- Sit in a seat with a drink in front of it. Someone's already sitting there. (Duh.)
- Snap, wag your finger, whistle, wave $100 bills or otherwise try to get the bartender's attention by any means other than making eye contact and smiling or perhaps politely saying "Excuse me."
- Treat the bartender like a servant. He or she is a skilled professional deserving of your respect; besides, he or she holds the keys to your buzz, so mind your manners.
- Be in a tremendous hurry to order and/or receive your drinks. Not only is it impolite, but it makes you look like a drunk.
- Ask for the bartender's name and then not tell him or her yours. That's a basic rule of general etiquette, but you'd be amazed how many people forget it when dealing with bartenders.
- Stalk the bartender. Just because she's a captive audience doesn't mean she wants you calling her, sending her notes or waiting for her outside when she gets off work.
- Reach between two people sitting at the bar. Most bartenders will put your drinks in a place where you don't have to interrupt a conversation or come between others to get at them.
- Take stuff out of the fruit tray or reach over the bar for a straw, napkin or whatever. There's an invisible line between you and the inside of the bar, and you should never cross it.
- Ask a bartender to settle a personal argument, especially between you and your significant other. It puts him or her in an impossible position.
- Try to barter, bargain or angle for free drinks. It puts everyone in an awkward position.
- Be afraid to ask for a wine list rather than ordering a glass of wine by varietal. If you just say "chardonnay," you may get a sublime French white or an over-oaked glass of cat's piss.

ARI BIALIKAMIEN

33 Restaurant and Lounge, Wed.-Sun. nights

Be still our beating hearts. Like a cross between Ricky Ricardo and Ricky Martin, he's a Latin smoothie with a seductive Colombian accent who greets his regulars by saying, "Hola!" In true South American style, he takes the time to make a drink to perfection, cares deeply about presentation, and would never consider using anything but fresh fruit juices and top-shelf liquors. His mojitos and caipirinhas are outstanding, and his knowledge of the classics is exhaustive, having learned from "a very old-school guy" who served as his mentor. Bialikamien developed 33's martini list, but unlike the disguise-the-taste-of-liquor selections at a lot of trendy bars, his are both sophisticated and not overly fruity.

Signature Drink:
33-tini

Muddle fresh strawberries and a splash of Sour Apple liqueur in a shaker. Add 2 oz. of Hypnotiq (a blend of cognac, vodka and citrus juices) and chill. Serve straight up, garnished with a strawberry.

BIALIKAMIEN: TRACY POWE

KRIS KNIEVIL

Avalon, Sun. nights

Better known as Ms. Kris, this saucy little minx manages the Copley Place movie theater by day and performs and hosts at the beloved Bay Village drag bar Jacques on Thursday through Saturday and Tuesday nights. A coquette in the Mae West tradition, he makes all his own outfits, which oscillate between parochial-school vixen and slinky femme fatale. At Lansdowne Street's long-running Sunday-night gathering of same-sex heat-seeking missiles, his bar is ground zero. Frequently cast in the role of cupid, he's forever fixing the hotties up, whatever their persuasion. For instance, he recently introduced one of the straight security guys to a girl he went to high school with, reasoning, "If I'm going to be bitter and single, I might as well make everyone else happy."

Signature Drink:
Strawberry Margarita

1 1/2 oz. Stoli Strawberry, 1/2 oz. Triple Sec, a splash of cranberry juice and Sour Mix. Serve on the rocks or straight up, as a shot or a drink.

NATALIE SEGUIN

The Living Room, Sat. and Sun. nights; Upstairs on the Square, Wed.-Fri. nights

A native of Montreal (where bar-hopping is an art), Seguin came to Boston four years ago and began bartending because of her natural affinity for mixing things together. "I'd classify myself as a mad chemist," she says, referring to the inventive martini list she developed for the waterfront's newest hangout. "I make a really damned good drink." By day, she's a makeup artist; her plan is to leave for Los Angeles as soon as possible to earn a master's degree in theatrical makeup (with a special emphasis in science fiction). In the meantime, you can find her altering people's outlooks with her carefully crafted cocktails, impeccable service and infectious joie de vivre.

Signature Drink:
The Whippersnapper

2 1/2 oz. Methusalem Rum, muddled with fresh raspberry, blackberry and lime juice and a splash of Apricot Passion Fruit Simple Syrup. Chill on ice and strain into a martini glass. Top with Brachetto or another Italian sweet sparkling red wine.

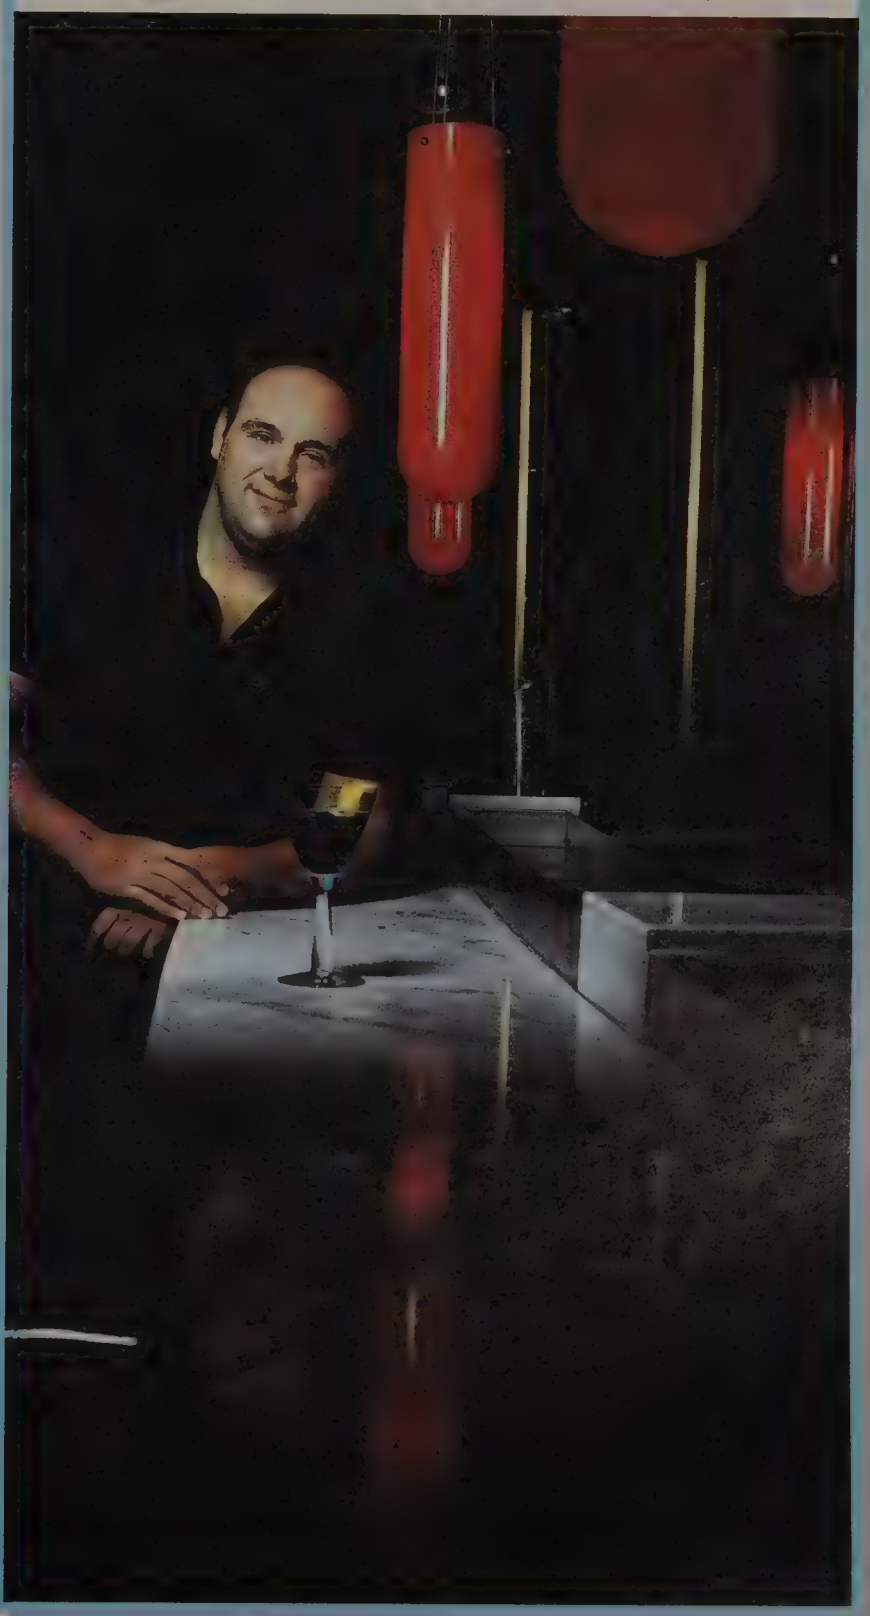
GARY MERTEN

Noir, Sun., Mon. and Wed.-Fri. nights

He's so impressive that a woman from Florida actually bothered to contact us and suggest we include him in this issue. A Garden State native, Merten began working as a bouncer as a teenager on the Jersey shore and took up slinging cocktails when one of the bartenders failed to show up for his shift. His uncanny resemblance to Tony Soprano is constantly noted, and he has a selection of wise-ass comebacks for that and other occasions. In fact, in his spare time, he hones his stand-up routine on the local comedy circuit. At this low-key, loungy nook in the lobby of the Charles Hotel, he typically serves everyone from Harvard professors, JFK School policy wonks and literati to visiting dignitaries and celebrities like Glenn Close and Dan Aykroyd. All of them agree with us: This ball-busting clown who makes great drinks is aces.

Signature Drink:
Old Fashioned

In a glass, muddle into a paste an orange slice, two cherries, four splashes of Angostura Bitters and a splash of Brandy. Add 2 oz. Maker's Mark bourbon, chill and serve on the rocks. Garnish with a cherry and an orange slice.



VIL, SEGUIN: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN; MERTEN: TRACY POWELL

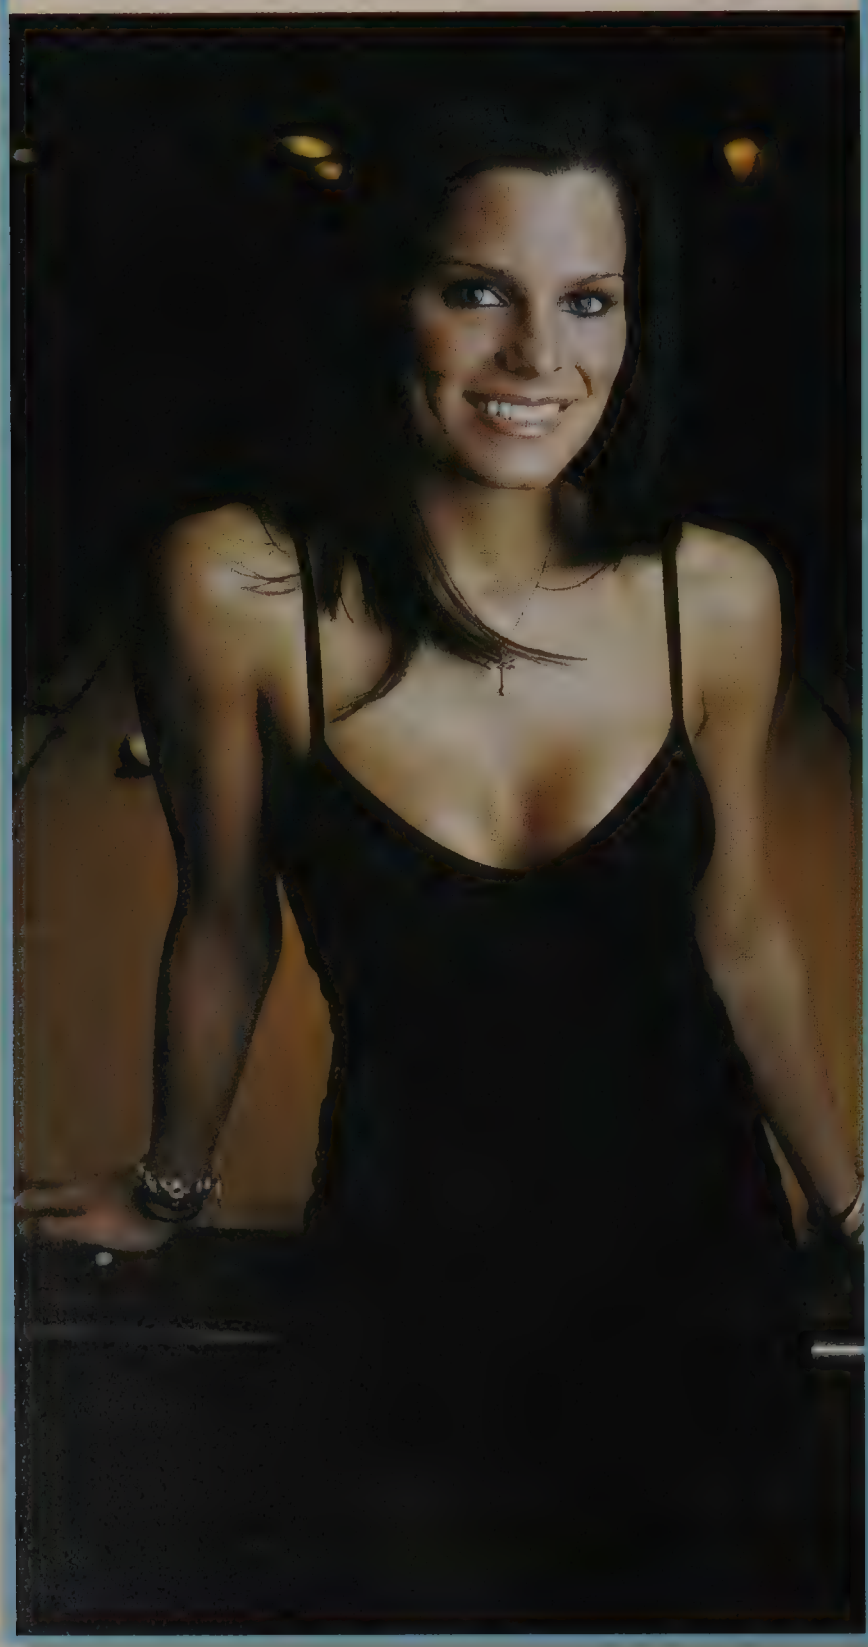
KIM KELLY

The Rack, Wed.-Fri. nights

For the past four and a half years, this dark-haired, blue-eyed beauty has been slinging drinks at Faneuil Hall's most happening pool hall. Although she studied physical therapy, performing cocktail therapy has become a career, and her regulars are so attached to her that they always remember her birthday or the holidays with flowers or gift certificates. Sassy and smart-ass when necessary, she doesn't take grief from anyone, has a comment for almost every occasion and can put an impatient customer in his or her place with a humorous remark. "The thing I love most about my job is the people I work with," she says. "It's an amazing staff, and even if I was offered my dream job, I'd stay at the Rack at least one night a week because I've become so close to everyone there."

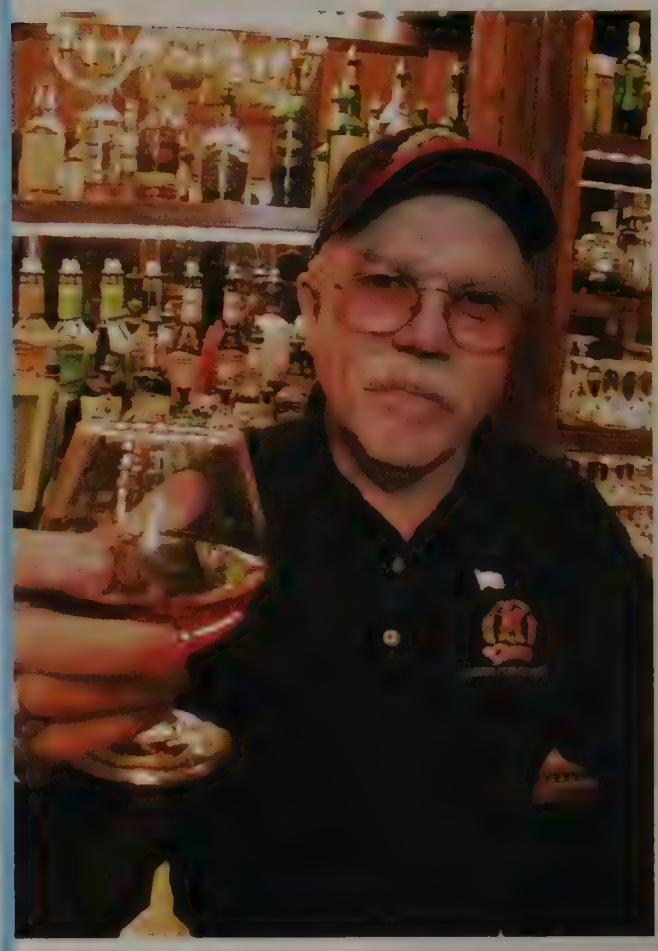
Signature Drink:
The Dirty Sanchez

1 shot each Stoli Vanil, Frangelico and Kahlua; shaken on ice and poured into a chilled martini glass rimmed with chocolate shavings. Top it off with a drop of Baileys Irish Cream.



EDDIE DOYLE

Bull & Finch Pub, Tue. and Thu. days



It may be a stretch to say that the creators of Cheers modeled the character of Sam Malone after Eddie Doyle, but not by much, since it was Doyle whom they met while scoping Boston for a bar at which to set their TV show. What's more, Doyle personifies the ethos "you wanna go where everybody knows your name." For more than 25 years, this legendary barman has presided over this Beacon Hill landmark, dispensing quips and witticisms to accompany his deftly poured drafts and impeccably crafted cocktails. An avid Boston sports fan and committed community activist, Doyle has raised millions of dollars for charity, including Cheers for Children, which he founded. With a heart as big as most bartenders' mouths, he's a genuine Boston character and a local treasure we're lucky to have. No wonder the mayor has declared Sept. 12 "Eddie Doyle Day."

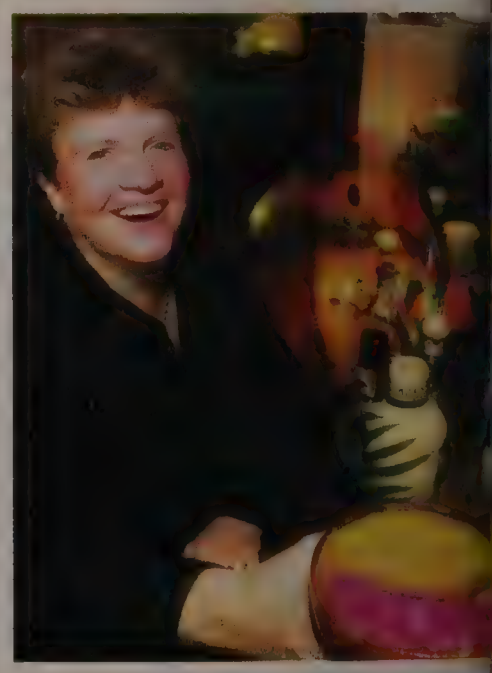
Signature Drink:
The Dublin Martini

Fill a pint glass with ice. Pour 1/2 oz. Dry Vermouth and 2 oz. Jameson Irish Whiskey. Chill and strain into a martini glass. Add a splash of Irish Mist for good luck and garnish with a lime rind.

ROBYN PITCHFORD

Cottonwood Café, Mon. night, Tue.-Fri. days

Her lunchtime regulars—corporate types who work in Copley Square—are among the most spoiled bar patrons anywhere. She knows their names, what they drink, what they want for lunch, how their kids did on their last report card and how the second date went with the hottie in the marketing department. In fact, she's gotten so close to some of her regulars that she gets invited to weddings, birthdays and the odd bat mitzvah. With more than 26 years of experience under her belt, there's nothing Pitchford hasn't seen or heard. In fact, she could do the whole thing with her eyes closed, but she's a stickler for detail who pampers her patrons to a fare-thee-well. Her great memory for names and faces makes even first-timers feel comfortable at her bar, and everyone's guaranteed to leave having heard at least one memorable joke. What more could you want?



Signature Drink:
The Ultimate Margarita

2 parts Cazadores Reposado Tequila, 1 part Cointreau. Fill with freshly squeezed lemon and lime juice, Gold Tequila and Sour Mix. Serve straight up, on the rocks or frozen, with or without salt.

DOYLE, PITCHFORD: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN; KELLY: TRACY POWE

TOTAL INFUSION

Steeping isn't just for tea anymore

BY JESSICA IREDALE

Just yesterday it seemed that everyone wanted a fancy-pants martini—sour apple, chocolate-truffle or even pomegranate. Today another concoction, the infusion, is catching the attention of Boston's thirsty crowds. According to Reggie St. Paul of the Blue Room, "Someone sees one go across the bar and says, 'What was that?' And then you're making 12 of them. It's the color that reels them in." A draft beer pales, quite literally, in comparison with a jewel-toned infusion—vodka, tequila, rum or gin steeped with fresh fruit (or other ingredients) and strained to eliminate any pulpy chunks. The end result is a beverage with a light fruit flavor, sweet but not syrupy as liqueurs are. At the East Coast Grill, Kris Venegas says one of his regulars refers to its popular drink, the Tranquillo, as dessert. Over at the Capital Grille, bartender Ross McLellan reports that during baseball season he serves upwards of 300 Stoli Dolis on game nights.

The origin of the art of infusion is unknown. Some say it started with 16th-century monks spicing up their liquor cabinets with fruits and herbs, while others point to the American picnic classic, the vodka-spiked watermelon. No matter the source, giant jugs brimming with anything from pineapple to coconut to raspberries and a liquor of choice are popping up behind bars everywhere. On average, the cost of "infusing yourself" runs between $6 and $10 a drink, the going rate for a martini.

A night on the infusion trail reveals the following findings:

* Most local mixologists consider the Capital Grille Boston's original infusion slingers—the Capital introduced its signature drink, the Stoli Doli, in 1991. The recipe is a simple mix of Stolichnaya vodka and Dole Hawaiian Gold pineapples. After infusing for five to seven days, the concoction is ready to pour. Bartenders serve the frothy, almost creamy pineapple vodka in a chilled martini glass, and it goes down like water. "People think two things when they think of the Capital Grille: steak and Stoli Dolis," says managing partner Christopher Scott, who cites company founder Ned Grace as the originator of the classic drink. 359 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-8900)

* In Kendall Square, the Blue Room's selections include blood-orange vodka, raspberry vodka, citron (vodka infused with lemon peel), dry-roasted ginger vodka and a mixture called Escondido, tequila infused with pineapple, coconut and vanilla beans. All are steeped for about two weeks before serving (except the Escondido, which requires a month to perfect) and are poured from bottles reminiscent of an old apothecary's workshop. They're typically served chilled, straight up or with a splash of soda. The Escondido is especially surprising, with a flavor more like smooth lemon butterscotch than your typical throat-burning tequila. 1 Kendall Square, Cambridge (617-494-9034)

At Saint, fruits commingle with spirits in decorative jars.

* Fire + Ice's entire specialty drink menu is modeled around infusions and, depending on the season, includes pineapple vodka, pineapple-strawberry vodka, Granny Smith vodka, coconut-pineapple-vanilla bean rum, strawberry rum, lemon-blueberry tequila, three-melon tequila and prickly pear tequila. Best sellers include the Lava Flow—a piña colada and strawberry daiquiri mixture—and the lemon-blueberry margarita, a traditional margarita made with the lemon-blueberry tequila. Both offer a temporary mental retreat to a warmer place where Jimmy Buffett plays all day. 50 Church St., Cambridge (617-547-9007); 205 Berkeley St., Boston (617-482-3473)

* The chic Saint is the last stop on the tour d'infusion. Handblown glass jars containing neatly stacked fruits soaked in Pearl vodka are instant eye-catchers in the placid Threshold Room. The selection rotates on a weekly basis, and each batch soaks for about three days. Libations du jour include melon, raspberry, peach and pineapple vodkas. After a taste of each, the melon and raspberry emerge the victors. 90 Exeter St., Boston (617-236-1134)

A number of other local watering holes also offer tasty infused concoctions:

* City Bar: Bourbon infused with caramelized Turkish figs, Chinese cinnamon and vanilla bean; rum infused with cardamom, ginger and lemon peel; tequila infused with mint, mango, pineapple or white peppercorn. 710 Boylston St., Boston (617-536-5300)

* East Coast Grill and Raw Bar. Tranquillo: Bacardi, Bacardi 151 and Meyers's rum infused with pineapple and vanilla beans. 1271 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-491-6568)

* Golden Temple. Stoli Doli. 1651 Beacon St., Brookline (617-277-9722)

* The Place. Stoli Doli; strawberry-infused vodka; pineapple-infused blue-raspberry vodka. 2 Broad St., Boston (617-523-2081)

* The Rack. Blueberry-infused tequila; Stoli Doli. 24 Clinton St., Boston (617-725-1051)

* Rouge. Blackberry-infused vodka. 480 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-867-0600)

* Sonsie. Pineapple-infused vodka. 327 Newbury St., Boston (617-351-2500)

* Stephanie's on Newbury. Stoli Doli; seasonal: vodka infused with blueberries, blood oranges, cranberries, pomegranates or strawberries. 190 Newbury St., Boston (617-236-0990)

* Teatro. Stoli Doli. 177 Tremont St., Boston (617-778-6841)

* Tremont 647. Vodka infused with pineapples, raspberries, papayas or vegetables; gin infused with blueberries; Tranquillo: Bacardi 151, Captain Morgan, Gosling's Black Rum, Meyers's Dark and Mount Gay infused with pineapple and vanilla beans. 647 Tremont St., Boston (617-266-4600)

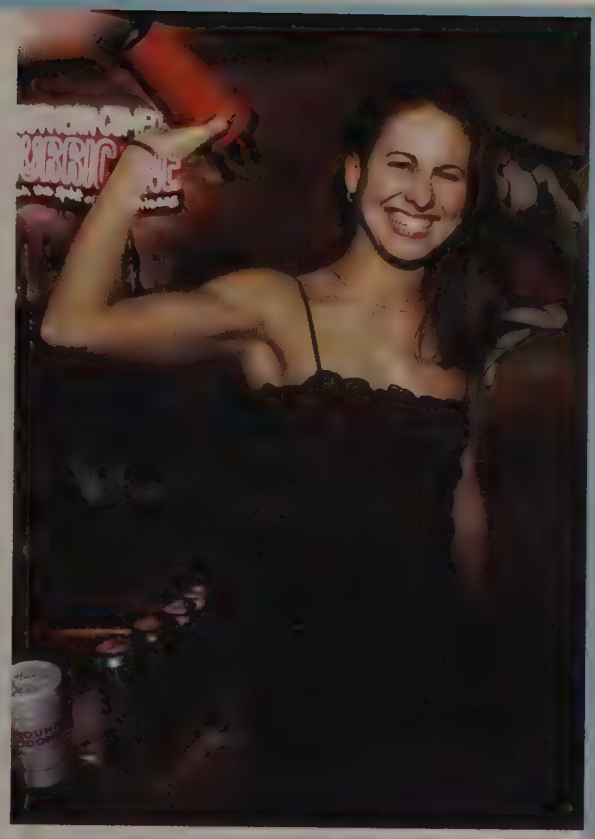
JENNIFER ZILIOLI
The Big Easy, Thu.-Sat. nights



What's not to love? First of all, there's the uncanny resemblance to Natalie Portman. Then there's the fact that by day, she's a personal trainer at a Boston Sports Club, while at night, she's like a one-woman Mardi Gras behind the bar, using her cocktail shaker as a percussion instrument and her bottle opener as a microphone. If there's music playing, she's constitutionally incapable of standing still. Having studied ballet with the Boston Ballet and the Kirov Academy, she's got the moves. All that, and an incandescent personality. No wonder that despite having worked at the Big Easy for only a few months, there's always a line several guys deep at her bar. Pouring potent potions, she's poetry in motion.

Signature Drink:
Green Apple Martini

2 parts Smirnoff Twist Apple Vodka to 1 part Green Apple Pucker and a splash each of Stoli Raspberry Vodka and Sour Mix. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass. Garnish with a cherry.

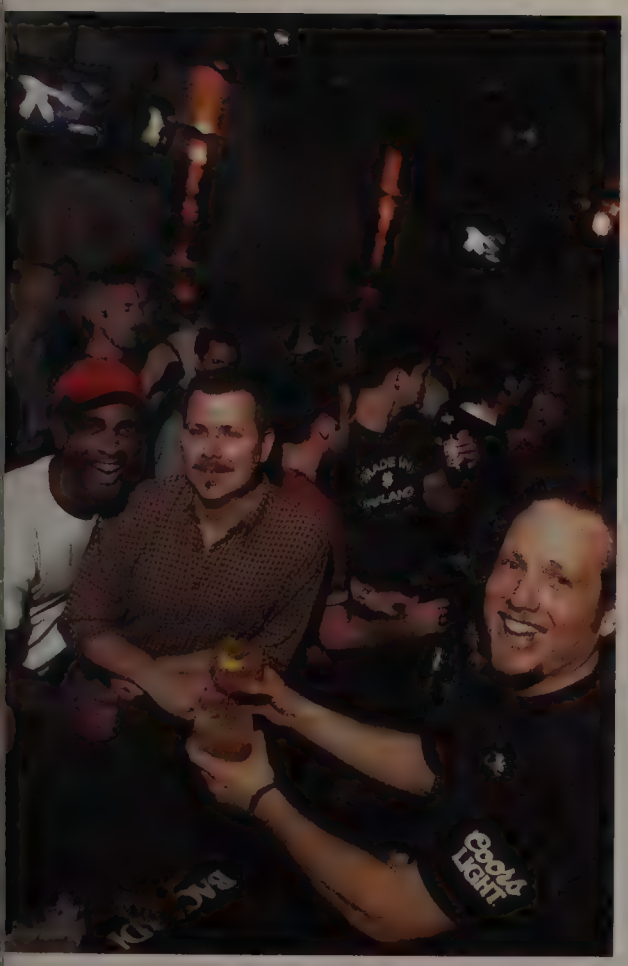
RACHAEL DIBONA
Hurricane O'Reilly's, Fri. and Sat. nights

Like all great bartenders, DiBona knows that every night is a new performance, and she changes costume accordingly for the appreciative, largely male audience at this downtown de-stressing oasis. "It's nothing I'd ever normally wear," she says. "It's a fantasy—tiny shirt, short skirt." Like the Energizer bunny on Prozac, she's as happy-go-lucky and outgoing as they come, constantly dancing behind her bar and upbeat even when she's in a bad mood. Perfectly suited to be the successful real estate broker she's planning to become, she's a heartbreaker with a heart of gold who lets 'em down easy. We only feel sorry for the person who has to wipe up the drool around her bar at the end of the night.

Signature Drink:
Raindrop

Equal parts Blue Curacao, Malibu Rum and pineapple juice. Shake on ice and serve as a shot.

TODD ASKEW
Club Café, Thu.-Sat. nights



For "10 glorious years," this corn-fed cutie from the Midwest has tended bar at one of the South End's most enduringly popular gay clubs; by day, he applies his master's degree in elementary education at a suburban public school. Amusingly for someone with his last name and sexual orientation, Askew once lived in Normal, Ill.—a wry observation indicative of the sharp wit with which he regales his customers. Though he's a smart aleck prone to sticking out his tongue and making faces at his regulars, he also makes a concerted effort to make shy wallflowers feel welcome. It's been a few years since he cut his hair, and the resulting unruly mop is one of his distinguishing characteristics, as is an uncanny ability to remember what people drink. Serving up a heaping helping of sarcasm along with the cocktails, he's one of the major reasons why this bar is where the boys are.

Signature Drink:
Jolly Rancher

2 parts Southern Comfort, 1 part Midori and Sour Mix. Shake on ice and serve on the rocks. Garnish with a cherry and an orange slice.

Y, ZILIOLI, DIBONA: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

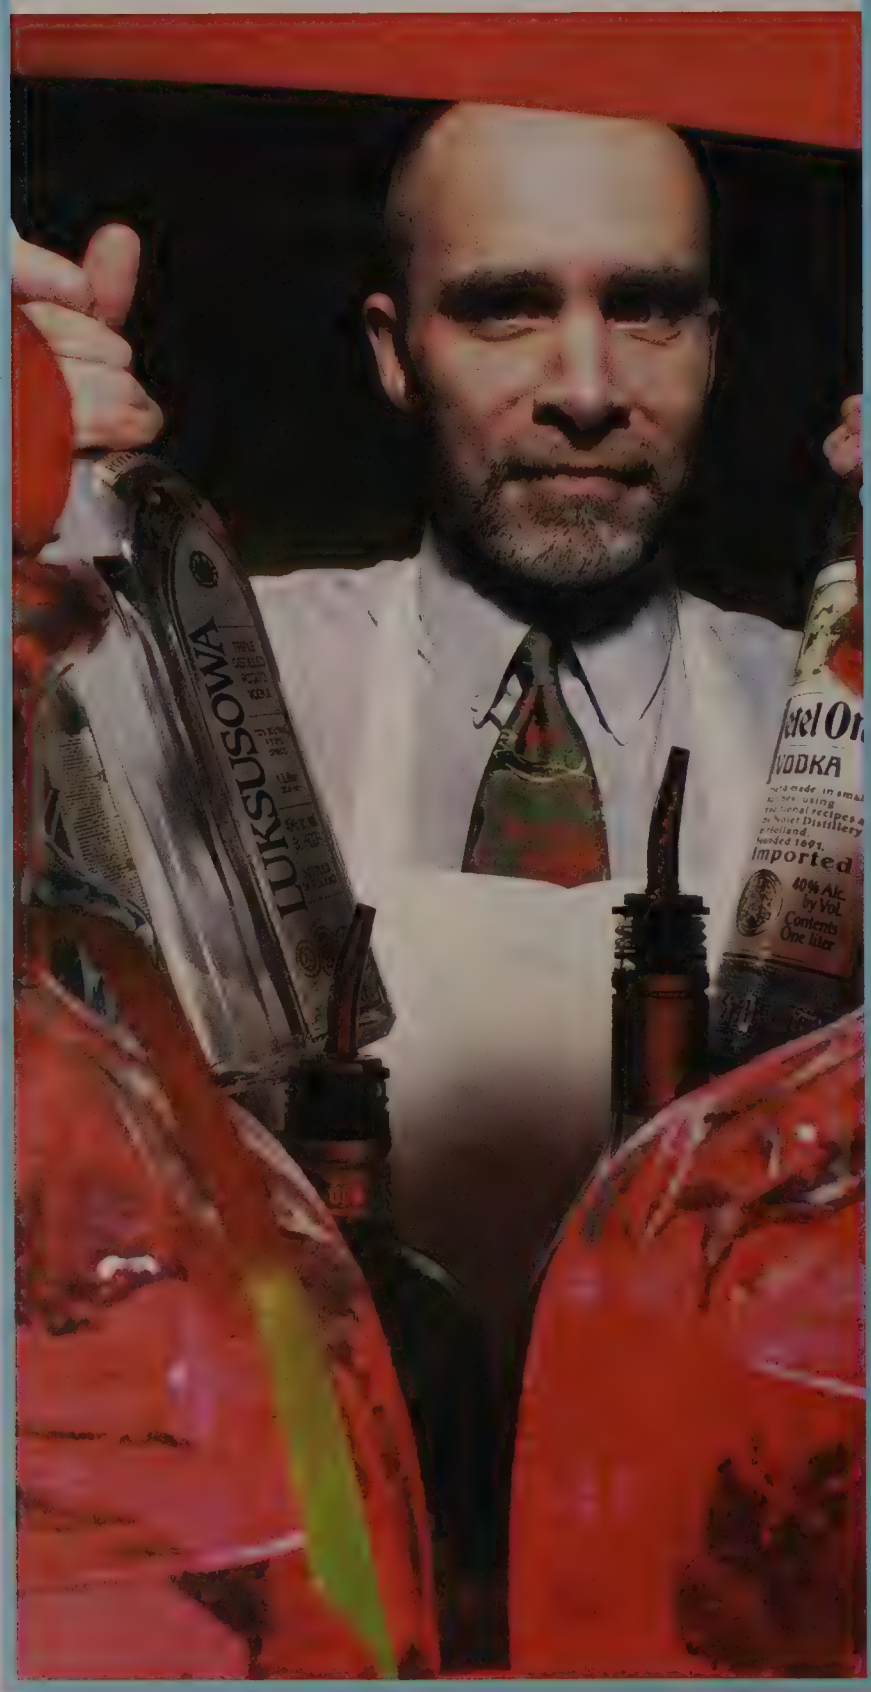
PAUL MCGOWAN

B-Side Lounge, Sun.-Tue., and Fri.; Plough and Stars, Wed.; People's Republic, Sat.

By day, he's a full-time Mr. Mom to his 3-year-old son, but by night he reigns supreme at three of the quirkiest hangouts in Cambridge. A former engineer, he worked normal daytime hours until 10 years ago, when he found himself spending 40 hours a week at bars bitching about his job. Realizing that he could get paid for hanging out in bars, he quit his job and became a bartender. The rest is history. Known for telling jokes, he's the bald, grouchy guy making snarky remarks. An example: When a customer asks, "What's the cheapest thing you've got?" his answer is likely to be "Customers like you, pal." So devoted are his regulars that they follow him from place to place, and one recently came to see him every single night for two weeks straight. Now that's what we call loyal.

Signature Drink:
The Haitian Divorce

Barbancourt Rum with muddled lime on the rocks. Garnish with a lime wedge.



CAROLINE FISKE

Red Fez, Wed.-Fri. nights

"Half of bartending is being a good listener," Fiske says, which explains her enormous popularity at this South End hipster hangout, as well as at previous gigs like West Street, Mantra, Masa and the South End Grill. Superfriendly and endlessly patient, her permanent smile is genuine, and she has a genius for acknowledging customers the moment they arrive. Before they can even start to get antsy, she disarms them with a charming, "I'll be right with you," and then ministers to them with the kind of service one would associate with a five-star hotel. In the drinks department, she's aces, comfortable with the classics but not afraid to experiment. "It's supposed to be fun, right?" she asks rhetorically. "I just make sure that it is."

Signature Drink:
The Madagascar

3 parts Stoli Vanil and 1 part fresh lime juice. Shake on ice and serve in a martini glass, topped with champagne and garnished with a lime wedge. The drink can also be served as a shot, in which case it's called a Squealin' New Zealand

PAUL FLYNN

Harvard Gardens, Tue., Thu., and Fri. nights

The consummate pro, Flynn's been bartending for nine years; in his past life, he held a 9-to-5 job in the telecomm industry. Old-school to the core, he's a stickler for details and prides himself on making drinks not just correctly but consistently. He's harder on himself than any customer could ever be and is the embodiment of attentiveness. "Service is paramount," he says. His regulars—a motley crew ranging from little old ladies who live on Beacon Hill to overworked young residents at Mass. General Hospital—have remained pretty much static over the years, so he's come to know all their idiosyncrasies. A sports nut, Flynn often stumps patrons with his vast reservoir of baseball trivia, but when the bar gets busy, he can sling drinks with the best of 'em.

Signature Drink:
Godiva Mint Martini

2 parts Absolut, 1 part White Crème de Menthe and 1 part Godiva White Chocolate Liqueur. Shake on ice and strain into a chocolate-drizzled martini glass.

TARA ROSE MACUCH

Via Matta, Mon.-Fri. and alternate Sat. nights

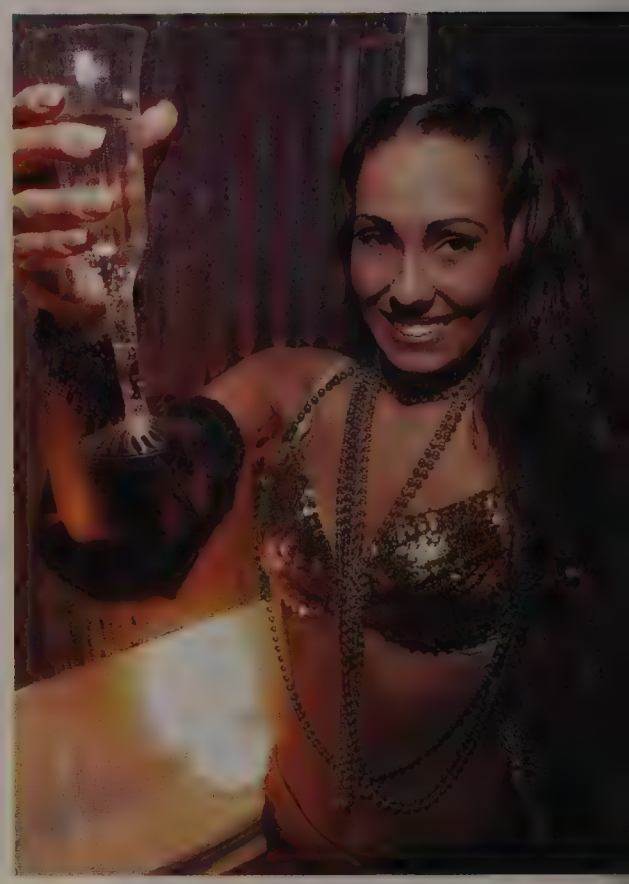
With a perpetual smile (imagine a sexy version of the Cheshire cat), Macuch welcomes guests to the bar at this super-trendy restaurant. Capable of putting the most uptight CEO at ease or extracting conversation from the most aloof celebrity, Macuch effortlessly ministers to the fashionable crowd of regulars and keeps everyone happy, whether they're there to partake in the buzz-worthy bar scene or waiting to be seated in the dining room. "It's like having people in my home," she says. "I want them to feel comfortable and make sure they have everything they want." Clearly, she succeeds famously, as her bar is consistently packed with a chic and attractive crowd who compete for her attention and treat her like the star that she is.

Signature Drink:
Basil Gimlet

A small handful of vigorously muddled fresh basil leaves, Simple Syrup and freshly squeezed lime juice in a glass. Add 3oz. Ketel One. Shake on ice and pour into a martini glass. Garnish with a basil leaf.

BARBARA ANN NOE

The Palace, Fri. and Sat. nights



Even at this busy Saugus nightclub multiplex, where more than 50 bartenders work on any given night, she still stands out. A Patriots cheerleader who cheered the team on during their Super Bowl victory, she's a lifelong dancer who teaches ballet, tap, jazz and gymnastics by day. Not surprisingly, she's a whirling dervish behind the bar, amping up the energy at Rio, the Brazilian room. Twice a night, she and another bartender perform a choreographed routine on the bar, tossing out Mardi Gras beads and shaking their money makers. If she has time, she'll sit down and chat with the regulars who come to see her. But when things get crazy, she can produce drinks faster than you can say, "Make mine a double," and she does it all with a sparkling esprit de corps and an unflagging sense of humor.

Signature Drink:
Barbie's Drink

Equal parts Smirnoff Vodka and Peach Schnapps, with a splash each of Chambord, cranberry, orange and pineapple juice. Shake vigorously on ice and serve on the rocks. Garnish with a cherry.

CY CLARK

21st Amendment, Mon.-Fri. days, Mon. and Sat. nights

If Clark's life were a sitcom, the blurb in TV Guide would go something like this: "Less than a block away from the State House, in the shadow of the gold dome, there's a hole-in-the-wall where the guy behind the bar cracks wise with the politicians, lobbyists and other characters who come in for lunch." In fact, Mitt Romney is just about the only big shot on Beacon Hill for whom our 22-year veteran hasn't poured a libation—which is understandable, given the governor's faith-based teetotaling. So Clark can be said to have one of the most important jobs in state government: the unofficial publican to the Democrats and the Republicans. So plugged in is he that last year he knew Jane Swift was bowing out of the governor's race before she made the announcement. He gets bonus points for remembering the names of the countless Beacon Hillers who crowd his bar on the weekends.

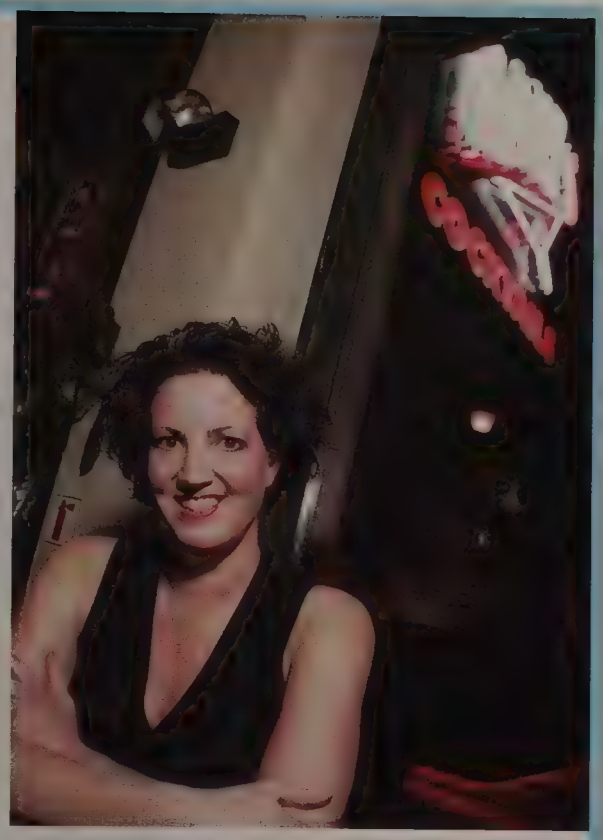
Signature Drink:
A Little U.N. Passion

1 part each Stoli Vodka, Cointreau, Cherry Schnapps and Simple Syrup, with 2 parts Goya passion fruit juice. Shake on ice and serve straight up in a martini glass. Garnish with a slice of star fruit.

MACUCH: TRACY POWELL; NOE, CLARK: DEREK KOUYOUMJ

ELAINE HARRINGTON

Flash's, Tue. day, Thu. night



A true Dorchester girl, smart and funny, Harrington is a co-owner of this Back Bay bar with excellent cheap eats and the feel of a secret clubhouse where anyone's welcome. She may be management, but she loves tending bar too much to give it up entirely. The bar's U shape lends itself to introductions, and she's a master at starting a conversation between groups or individuals and then sitting back to watch what happens. Her regulars range from after-work nine-to-fivers and neighborhood residents to the after-theater crowd and everyone who works at any of the upscale restaurants nearby, especially late-night. If she can't remember your name, she'll remember your drink. What's more important than that?

Signature Drink:
The OFD (Originally from Dorchester)

Equal parts Absolut, Baileys and White Crème de Menthe. Shake on ice and serve straight up, covered with chocolate shavings.

BOB ROSE

Tavern on the Water, Wed. nights; the Warren Tavern, alternate Sat. days

Most of the time, he's a manager at these two Charlestown landmarks, but when he does get behind the bar, this shy guy puts on his game face and plays like a pro. In the winter, his regulars are mostly Navy Yard residents and assorted other townies, but in warm weather (when Tavern on the Water becomes one of the Western Hemisphere's greatest places to drink outdoors), his bar attracts a mix of tourists, day-trippers and sailors whose boats are docked at the marina. The view of Boston is unparalleled, and he handles the craziness with perfect aplomb, making drinks as fast as humanly possible and smiling through everything he does.

Signature Drink:
Dark and Stormy

1 part Gosling's Black Rum to 3 parts ginger beer. Serve over ice, garnished with a lime wedge.

MARIO MENDUNI

The Place, Thu.-Sun. nights

A black belt in tae kwon do and a former competitor in karate and kick-boxing, he brings his martial arts mojo to bartending, specializing in the fine art of what's known as "flair." The crowd at this high-tech, upscale sports bar includes a lot of professional athletes and stockbrokers. To get them going, he performs à la Tom Cruise in Cocktail. In addition to a lot of flipping bottles and flying glassware, there's the occasional sound of breaking glass, accompanied by laughter and applause. An appealing combination of stunningly coordinated and extremely klutzy, he's mesmerizing to watch, and when things get busy, he can crank 'em out in lean-and-mean style.

Signature Drink:
Stoli Doli

Soak pineapple chunks and strawberries in Stoli Vodka for a week. Chill and serve straight up, garnished with a strawberry.

NGTON, ROSE: DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN; MENDUNI: TRACY POWELL

STACEY HUGGINS

Pho République, Thu. and Sat.; Capital Grille, Wed. and Fri.

Picture Goldie Hawn (at the height of the Laugh-In era) ministering to thirsty hipsters from behind the bar and you'll have an accurate image of this Long Island native who brings delightful energy to the super-cool Vietnamese restaurant and lounge in the South End and Newbury Street's swankiest steakhouse. Constantly clowning around, she has an infectious laugh and a trillion-watt smile topped off with a kooky fashion sense. Her hair changes with head-spinning frequency, from a brunette shag to a blond Farrah Fawcett flip to a reddish pixie cut within the space of a week. In short, there's nothing boring or predictable about her. She earns bonus points for her ability to handle freaks and prima donnas with the skill of a board-certified psychiatrist.

Signature Drink:
Lemongrass Martini

2 oz. Absolut Courant, 1 oz. each of Cointreau and freshly squeezed lemon juice. Shake on ice and strain into a martini glass. Garnish with lemongrass.

JON CHASE

Parris, Thu.-Sat. nights; Zuma, Wed.-Fri. days

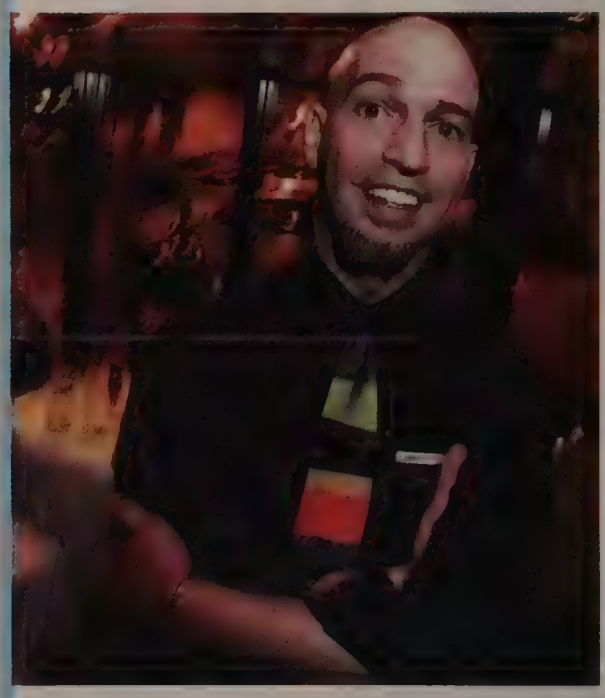
While waiting to join a fire department, he puts out the fire in his customers' throats with potables made precisely and pronto. Having worked in the restaurant business since he was 18, Chase has been tending bar for the past three years, and on a busy night, he's one big blur. With his arms moving at mach speed, he tries to ring in orders at the same time he's pouring drinks. Although he's capable of mixing up to 600 cocktails in a night, speed is not his only strong suit. The ladies who frequent the two Faneuil Hall hot spots where he works are susceptible to his considerable charms. When one offers him her phone number, he smiles, accepts it and leaves it at that. In other words, he's a perfect gentleman.

Signature Drink:
Calari's Kool Aid

2 parts Absolut Citron, 1 part Cointreau, freshly squeezed juice from a couple of lime wedges and a splash of cranberry juice. Shake on ice and pour as a shot.

PAUL CHRISTIE

Gargoyle's on the Square, Wed.-Sun. nights



A besotted father, Christie says his son, Jackson, "thankfully takes after his mother." When not with his family, he observes the world spinning around from behind the bar of this Somerville haunt, where his regulars reflect the newly minted hipness of Davis Square. In addition to impeccable service and potent potables, he offers an interesting perspective on the daily grind. A reformed stand-up comic, Christie has swapped the microphone for a cocktail shaker, and his bar is a stage where the audience is usually in stitches. As if all the yucks weren't enough, he's also known for creating something called the Tower of Sambuca, a pyramid of shot glasses filled with anisette liqueur with which the choicest idiocy of the day is toasted.

Signature Drink:
The Dedo

2 oz. each of Stoli Orange, Absolut Citron and Finlandia Cranberry, a splash each of sweetened lemon and cranberry juice. Shake and pour over a shot of 7-Up into a 10 oz. martini glass. Garnish with a lemon twist.

SINGING CELEBRATIONS

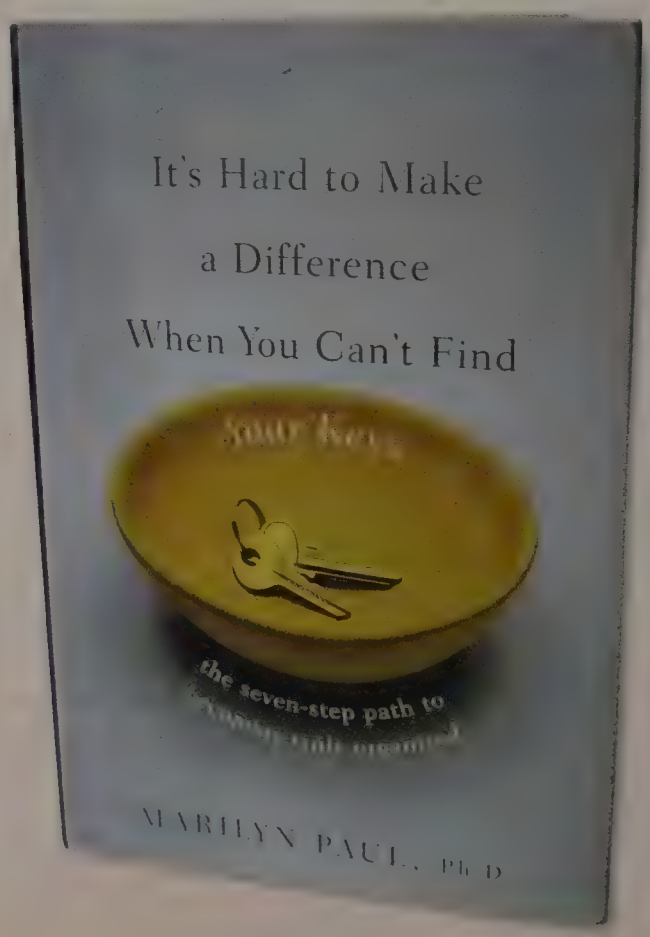
Need a song written for some big event? Call Toasts of the Town at 781-329-4345 or go to www.toastsofthetown.com. The service typically costs $125 to $150.

Nothing marks the moment of some life milestone, making it pungent and memorable, like a poem or song written to commemorate the occasion. And yet many people are born without the Gershwin, Ogden Nash, or Lerner and Lowe chip installed in their cerebral CPU. So, along comes Toasts of the Town to create a song or poem for you, written as if from a cozy insider position and packed with private jokes and mischievous allusions. Sally Curran, whose sparkling eyes and ready laugh just wanna help you have fun, quizzes you and gets the scoop on the occasion along with her song-smithing cohort, Patty Jenkins. The result is usually set to the music of some well-known song, which can then be performed by the subject's whole gang of friends. Toasts' numbers hoist high the joy of birthdays—especially those ending in some significant "0"—weddings, family reunions, farewell parties, graduations and business occasions like retirements or award ceremonies. These lyrics, to the tune of "My Favorite Things," celebrate one lady's affinity for wild garb: "Animal print: leopard, zebra and cheetah/Throw on the shades, she's a slick señorita...Our Tigress Woods is a happening broad." The songs celebrate work and play, family and passions. For that merry, champagne-coughing punchline, Sally says, "bizarre and identifying quirks work best."

GROCERY STORE OF YORE

McKinnon's is an old-fashioned grocery store at 239 Elm Street, Somerville. 617-666-0888.

McKinnon's, which opened in 1966, harkens back to the pre-supermarket days when grocery stores were part of an urban neighborhood. Holding its flavorful, marvelously old-fashioned ground amid the Starbuckery of booming Davis Square, this little, feverishly populated mecca offers high quality at prices that seem to have eluded inflation. Energized butchers in white coats slice meats—they sell only prime and choice—that range from London broil beef shoulder (What? Only $2.47?) to Perdue Oven Stuffers for $5.90. You can also find marinated teriyaki tips, spiced-up pork loin or beef stuffed lusciously with spinach and provolone, and more down-home fare like ham hocks, chicken livers and giblets. A hot deli serves comfort food—McKinnon's is famous for fish and chips made from classy haddock and served with a smile. Amazing, too, are packs of lemons, sometimes five for a dollar, and spices that are often half the price of those at other stores. But the biggest draw is the scene, a glorious ethnic jumble of neighbors chatting and laughing, the checkout staff joking good-naturedly with customers, who swap gossip and colorful blarney at the counter. It's the homey neighborhood grocery preserved.



MR. CLEAN'S SPIRITUAL SIDE

It's Hard to Make A Difference When You Can't Find Your Keys, by management consultant Marilyn Paul, is a holistic guide to getting organized.

Albert Einstein said, "No problem can be solved from the same level of consciousness that created it. We must learn to see the world anew." In the same spirit, Marilyn Paul approaches the mess, the piles, the slobitude of daily life from something of a spiritual position. She recommends that we look inward, on the path to creating that gorgeous spaciousness, both outer and inner, that appears when things are peacefully ordered. She invites you to envision your surroundings and your relationship to them in "pure curiosity" and contemplate the sacredness, beauty and value that come when you have created an untangled environment. Paul's book is interwoven with gentle inquiries into the nature of your (and her own) disorganization. It asks questions about the reader's habits that, when answered, will help speed the way to successful scrubbing and pile-demolishing. Though receptive to the idea that messiness may equal comfort for some, Paul proposes that an orderly environment helps with maintaining healthy boundaries, keeping promises and cultivating more pleasing rhythms in your life.

Square Meals

Amid Brookline's plentiful offerings, Washington Square Tavern stands out from the crowd

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Few arteries in the region boast the number and variety of restaurants that Beacon Street in Brookline possesses. Cuisines of every ethnicity are offered in storefront after storefront. A few are quite good—Fugakyu near Coolidge Corner stands out, with its full range of Japanese offerings, while Taberna de Haro delights on a smaller scale with authentic Spanish cuisine. Thanks to a tip from a colleague, I can now add the Washington Square Tavern to the distinguished company of those eateries.

Located at the southwest corner of the intersection of Washington and Beacon, the Tavern is easy to miss. The only signage is discreet frosted-glass lettering on the storefront window, noticeable only if you are looking for it. Inside, the inviting dining room is appointed in dark wood all the way up to its high, charcoal gray ceiling. A long bar seats about 10, and a high community table in the center of the dining room, nicknamed the "surfboard" for its shape, seats another 10 at high-backed stools. Otherwise, an array of tables and banquettes are sprinkled around the room. A tall bookcase filled with books forms the wall across from the entrance, and a window in the middle of the bookcase provides a view into the kitchen.

Saturday night at the Tavern, at least in the early hours, appears to be family night, with multigenerational parties filling the large tables. The informality of paper napkins is balanced by the fresh flowers on the tables, and the atmosphere is warm and inviting, save for the heavy beat of obtrusive recorded music. Brookline restaurants and bars may be smoke-free, but noise pollution is not so easily banished.

The ethnicity of the Tavern is not in doubt. Chef Paul Hathaway, a veteran who has worked with a who's who of the Boston restaurant scene from Todd English to Jody Adams to Paul O'Connell, produces an essentially American cuisine. Most of the offerings fall into the general category of "comfort food," but Hathaway renders them with a flair and finesse that belies the connotation of ordinariness that the phrase often conveys. Certainly, comfort food is not often accompanied by baguettes as fine as those the Tavern procures from Iggy's Bakery—impeccably fresh and soft on the inside, with excellent, chewy crust outside.

The Tavern's patron-friendly prices are remarkable. Its half-dozen appetizers range from $6 to $10, while main courses top out at $17. A bowl of potato leek soup ($6) with red beet puree and horseradish cream boasted a flavorful broth whose mellow earthiness was enhanced by the mild infusion of horseradish. The red swirl of the beet puree added a visual dimension that delighted the eye. A half-dozen baked oysters ($8) delivered their briny freshness enhanced by a slightly tart dose of hard cider butter and a sprinkling of brioche breadcrumbs.

A special one evening, crisp rock shrimp, arrived as a mountain of golden-brown, deep-fried treats, resembling flash-fried calamari in their light, delicate breading, but with a texture and flavor that delighted the shrimp lovers in our group. They shared a plate with a salad of tiny, piquant slices of green chili and cucumber in a roasted-tomato vinaigrette. Small shards of crunchy shaved fennel added a slightly licorice note, but I could have done without the stemmy watercress that completed the presentation. Last, but certainly not least among the first courses, was a hefty hindquarter of duck confit ($9), whose crisp skin encased rich, moist flesh. The accompaniment of sour cherry compote and sprightly, fresh arugula dressed in a light vinaigrette added the perfect flavor and texture counterpoints to the duck.

From a comfort-food point of view, the offering that leaps from the menu is the Tavern pot roast ($17), a healthy slab of moist, coarse-textured beef, permeated with the warm, sweet flavor of carrots, and garnished with al dente broccoli florets and creamy whipped potatoes. The size of the portion necessitated a doggy bag, and the leftovers yielded more than one sandwich for lunches the following days. A grilled pork chop ($17) was glazed with spiced apple cider and seared over a hot flame to seal in its juicy goodness. Creamy polenta tantalized and haunted with its almost exotic flavor, and a mound of succulent sautéed greens, redolent of garlic, formed the third dimension of this well-balanced meal. A seared-tuna platter ($12) yielded three generous slabs of rare, tender tuna, moistened with a sprightly ginger wine sauce and resting on a generous thicket of sesame-dressed fresh spinach. A crunchy, somewhat dense rice cake provided an interesting although not altogether successful texture contrast. Finally, ricotta ravioli ($15) demonstrated the Tavern's versatility. Obvi-sly, pasta has become a rt of mainstream Ameri- n cuisine that good chefs all ethnic persuasions can ndle. The Tavern's ten- r pillows of tasty, ricotta- uffed pasta, dressed with roasted-tomato ragout dded with bright green as and earthy mush- oms, would have been a ntender in the best of ston's Italian kitchens.

The Tavern offers a mber of good red wines the glass, including a 99 Les Petites Tourettes 6) from Côte du Lu- ron, a southern Rhone gion known for its rea- nably priced, well-structured wines. ually they exhibit peppery overtones, t this one had a pleasant, clean finish, king it a fine accompaniment for the od. Bigger and brassier was the 2000 ios de Susan Balbo, a full-bodied Ar- ntinean cabernet sauvignon with a rvelous bouquet ($8). The Tavern does t serve dessert, but knowledgeable pa- ns simply cross Washington Street to han's Bakery, purveyors of splendid nch and Greek pastries and delicious creams.

Service at the Tavern started out on brusque side. When our waiter asked ether we would like drinks, I told n, "No, we plan to make do with the ne." His gruff response, "Wine is a nk," caught me off guard. But as the ning progressed, he proved to be an nest person who plied his trade effi- ntly and professionally—a welcome ntrast to the tiresome, chummy tick of too many young waitpersons ("Hi, I'm Lloyd, and I'll be your waiter tonight"). More to the point, our waiter's straightforward, businesslike style was well matched to this serious, no-nonsense restaurant, with its delicious, well-prepared dishes and value-packed prices. iB

Springing Surprises

Beard, Blackfin, Expecting the unexpected

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Will Ana Sortun of Oleana win the James Beard Award for Best Chef in the Northeast? Stay tuned.

It happens every spring. When the James Beard Award nominations are announced, the short list for Best Chef: Northeast includes the familiar names you'd expect and an occasional, no less deserving, surprise candidate.

This year, local nominees once again include Barbara Lynch of No. 9 Park and Frank McClelland of L'Espalier. Ana Sortun of Oleana, the new name on the list, says she was surprised and delighted by the news.

"I'm really happy," she says, adding that she's celebrating already with "a little champagne here, a little champagne there." As a first-timer, she's limiting her expectations to "having a good time" at the awards event on May 5, and keeping her focus on getting ready to open Oleana's patio.

SECOND COURSE

Expected: Tony Ambrose opening Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar in Hingham. Unexpected: The chef who made Asian/French/Italian fusion cuisine irresistible at Ambrosia on Huntington with the likes of lobster sashimi martinis and kelp risotto is serving up a combination seafood/classic steakhouse menu at his new venue. Yes, the expansive raw bar will offer oysters from the East and West coasts and sashimi, and Ambrose promises to buy most of the restaurant's fish straight from local fishermen at the docks. But the rest of the menu is traditional, as befits the restaurant's setting—an 18th-century sea captain's house. Entrees include baked stuffed lobster, rack of lamb and Delmonico steak with blue cheese butter. Among the dessert choices are crème brûlée, apple cobbler and—surprise!—cheesecake.

Unexpected venue for fusion: If you crave dim sum in elegant surroundings during the week, drop into The Lounge at The Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common, for "contempo-Asian" tea, dim sum and pastries on Monday, Tuesday and Friday afternoons. Chef Kuan Kwong Shing handles the Asian angle, while pastry chef Christine D'Angeli prepares more traditional tea sandwiches and pastry cart selections. Teas include China Rose Petal and Cherry Sencha.

At Radius, former sous chef Brian Reimer has been promoted to the position of chef de cuisine after the departure of Gabriel Frasca, who had joined chef/owner Michael Schlow in the kitchen about 18 months ago. "It's hard to leave any job you love so much," says Frasca, but "it's time to try something else." For now, he's enjoying a respite from major kitchen responsibilities and working on the line at Pigalle a few nights a week while he figures out what's next. Any ideas what that might be? As a matter of fact, Frasca says, when his sweetie—chef Amanda Lydon—opened the kitchen at Metro awhile back, the two had discussed establishing a professional partnership and opening their own restaurant at some point. Lydon has since left Metro, now closed, and landed a plum position at UpStairs on the Square.

"It's a wrinkle we didn't quite expect," says Frasca of Lydon's unexpected opportunity, though his tone makes it clear that this wrinkle, unlike most, is more than welcome. "Meanwhile, I'm incredibly grateful for the dream job at Radius. I had a wonderful time doing it."

Adaptations and adjustments: In Somerville, Eat is "streamlining" both its Monday night guest chef program and its dinner schedule. Guest chefs will now appear on an occasional basis, and dinner will be served Wednesday and Thursday, 6 to 10pm, Friday and Saturday from 6 to 10:30pm, and Sunday from 5:30 to 9:30pm.

Less than two months after opening its stylish doors in the former Oskar's location, Epiphany apparently experienced an economy-related revelation and introduced a more affordably priced menu. The new lunch menu ($7-$11) offers simple fare such as farfalle with chicken tenderloins and grilled vegetables with goat cheese on a baguette. Dinner is now served in the form of "small plates," such as a mixed grill satay with caramelized pineapple, and "larger plates," such as tea-smoked duck with chili plum sauce. The most expensive item is $22. iB

ZIN IN THE CITY

Members of the Zinfandel Advocates & Producers organization were recently asked to describe the aroma of zinfandel, and they came up with: "Briary, jammy, explosive fruit, berry pie, California monster berry fruit, pureness of fruit, explosive fruit, yummy..." Enough already—uncork a bottle!

This month, representatives from more than 50 California wineries will try to make zinfandel converts out of Bostonians during the Zinfandel Tasting at the Boston Center for the Arts on April 29. From the mouth-watering descriptions of this wine, made from the only grape varietal considered unique to the U.S., it won't be difficult.

As part of their East Coast tour, the Zinfandel Advocates & Producers will bookend the BCA event with free tastings and hors d'oeuvres aboard the Acela train from D.C. to Boston on April 25 and 28 and from Boston to New York on April 30. *539 Tremont St., Boston (530-274-4900). SAT./APRIL 26

Music: Party for the Planet

With Old Man Winter having stolen so much of our so-called spring, we're doubly determined to make the most of what's left. What finer way to enjoy the season than to sprawl out on a blanket by the Charles River (on what had better be a beautiful, warm, dry day) listening to free music? Summer will be filled with opportunities to do just that, but few concerts have a line-up like this spring's EarthFest, organized by 92.9 WBOS: Sheryl Crow (left), Big Head Todd and the Monsters, Nickel Creek, Alice Peacock, Sister Hazel, Dan Zanes—and the man we're most excited about, Peter Wolf. Of course, you get to learn all about environmental causes too, but be warned: Leaving your spot on the grass is a high-risk maneuver—there are usually so many EarthFesters that it's "finders keepers" when it comes to sitting room. That's 11:30am-6pm, no cover, all ages. If you're up for more, there's an EarthFest Post Party with Nickel Creek at the House of Blues at 8:30pm, 21+. Hatch Shell on the Esplanade; House of Blues, 96 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-491-BLUE).

TUE./APRIL 29

Tastings: A Model UN

How many neighborhoods can boast restaurants serving Vietnamese, Chinese, Korean, Brazilian, Italian, Irish, Taiwanese, Pakistani, Colombian, Indian and American cuisine within a half-mile radius? Just one in Boston: Allston Village. You can sample all those cuisines and more at the IMPROPER-sponsored Taste of Allston Village at the DoubleTree Guest Suites April 29. Restaurants like Carlo's Cucina Italiana, Grasshopper, Pho Que Huong, Rangoli, Seoul Bakery, Sunset Grill & Tap and Spike's Junkyard Dogs, among others, will serve up delicacies to benefit the community group Allston Village Main Streets. All food that's not consumed will be donated to the Greater Boston Food Bank's Second Helping Program. DoubleTree Guest Suites, 400 Soldiers Field Road, Allston (617-254-7564). 6-8pm. $25.

MON./APRIL 21

CityScope: Marathon Monday

In 1994, Kenyan runner Cosmas Ndeti set the record for the fastest finish in the Boston Marathon at two hours, seven minutes and 15 seconds. That got us thinking about all the things we could accomplish in that time span, including struggling to read 10 pages of David McCullough's John Adams; watching episodes of A Makeover Story, A Dating Story and A Wedding Story back-to-back on TLC; or surfing the Internet for summer vacation deals. Yeah, it just seems like we've got better things to do than run 26.2 miles, but we'll be sure to catch the final turn at the Cactus Club April 21. We won't be alone: About 500,000 spectators line the course annually. But only a lucky few know the feeling of floating over the finish line—many frozen margaritas later—as the street cleaners sweep up the mess. www.bostonmarathon.org.

Comedian Rickey Smiley

THROUGHOUT APRIL

Comedy: A Laugh a Day

With war on every channel, we're in desperate need of some cheering up. A handful of comedians have come to the rescue. First up are Darrell Hammond, best known for his impersonations of Bill Clinton on Saturday Night Live, and Rickey Smiley, former host of BET's Comic View and co-star of Friday After Next, who appear on consecutive nights at the Comedy Connection April 18-19. Also on the 19th, Ellen Degeneres, who played the first openly gay lead character on a television show, performs stand-up at the Orpheum. Then you have a choice of seeing Kevin Pollack from The Usual Suspects and A Few Good Men at the Comedy Connection or Margaret Cho at Symphony Hall April 25. Round out the month with Dean Edwards (a.k.a. Ed Bradley, Grace Jones and Sidney Poitier from Saturday Night Live) at the Comedy Connection April 26. See Comedy on page 66 for more information.

Tastings: Good Enough to Eat

The analogy that likens chefs to artists has been made a thousand times—the plate is their canvas, the ingredients their medium, blah, blah, blah—so we won't bother. Instead, we'll just tell you straight out that 20 local chefs will be creating works of art using food at the 10th annual Edible Art event at Shreve, Crump & Low. In the past, chefs have paid tribute to Matisse, Michelangelo's David, William Wegman's dogs and Dr. Seuss' Cat in the Hat. This year's chefs include Thomas John of Mantra, Shane Gray of Mistral, Jesse Perrin of the Fireplace, Todd English of Bonfire, Andy Husbands of Rouge and Ed Gannon of Aujourd'hui. Judging their creations: Dana Cowin, editor-in-chief of Food & Wine; Jacques Pepin of Today's Gourmet; and Burt Wolf, host of five syndicated television series focusing on food, travel and cultural history. Enjoy an evening of food, fine wine, a silent auction of original artwork and live music. Proceeds benefit scholarship programs at the Art Institute of Boston. Shreve, Crump & Low, 330 Boylston St., Boston (617-349-8586). MBTA: Green Line to Arlington. 6pm. $100

Art: When Worlds Collide

In recent years, the art and tech worlds have become so intertwined that cyber arts is now its own genre. As proof of the expansiveness of the genre, the Boston Cyber Arts Festival, now in its third year, has become one of the biggest art events in the city—and, we might add, one of the most entertaining. (Where else do people from such disparate backgrounds—think super-nerdy techies, flamboyant artists and hip electronic musicians—mingle?) This year, the fest includes about 100 events and exhibitions over two weeks. It all starts with the Opening Night Party April 25 at the Hotel@MIT, featuring music by electronic-music laptop maestro DJ Flack and work by dozens of artists and techies. In the following weeks, dozens of museums and galleries participate with displays of visual art and Web art, conferences, symposia, performance art, demonstrations and lectures. Among the many musical events are the American premiere of the Toy Symphony, a collaboration between the Boston Modern Orchestra Project and the MIT Media Lab (April 26), and an Electronic Music Marathon. Through May 11. www.bostoncyberarts.org.

Tastings: Sampling (Food, That Is) at Avalon

Anyone who's ever been to the Beyond Shelter event at Avalon knows that no matter how much you pig out on samples from Le Soir, Jasper White's Summer Shack, Truc or Sonsie, you simply must save room for ice cream from Rancatore's in Belmont. It's hidden in the back of the club on the landing, and if there were a map to all the treasures found at this yearly event sponsored by the IMPROPER, this one would be marked with a giant X. As for the rest of the 28 booths, it's a gourmet feast, with restaurants like Armani Café, Bob the Chef's, Clio, Aquitaine and Hamersley's Bistro offering tasty samples to benefit the Friends of Boston's Homeless. After indulging in a cup of Grapenut raisin ice cream, dance to the big band sounds of Kendrick Oliver & the New Life Jazz Orchestra. 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-534-2526). www.fobh.org. MBTA: Green Line to Kenmore. 6pm. $50, $20 after 8pm.

Classical Music: Classics Meet Classical

If you imagine the Symphony Hall crowd as a bunch of serious, refined folks talking in hushed murmurs, you're in for a surprise. The fifth annual WCRB Classical Cartoon Festival, an all-day pairing of classical music and classic Warner Bros. cartoons at Symphony Hall, goes like this: Thousands of kids and adults run about amid classical performances, costumed cartoon characters, performers, storytellers, magicians, clowns and continuous showings of classic cartoons—not to mention a caricaturist, a scavenger hunt and face-painters. Here's one touch that only the adults will fully appreciate: a showing of What's Opera Doc?, the Bugs Bunny/Elmer Fudd spoof of Wagner's Die Walkyrie. Tickets are $6 and proceeds benefit the Mass. Brain Injury Association. 10am-4pm. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-1200). www.bso.org.

APRIL 27-29

Art: Spring Has Sprung

We find nothing more relaxing than strolling through the Museum of Fine Arts browsing its galleries. But combine the relaxation with the sensory overload and we often end up with a case of "museum legs"—becoming so drained that we can barely drag ourselves to the café. (We'd feel like dolts admitting this if we didn't know so many others who share the affliction.) The museum's annual Art in Bloom, however, which pairs floral arrangements with artwork, is sure to invigorate the senses with its vivid colors and heady fragrances. More than 80 displays made by New England florists interpret nearby works, from Asian paintings to European masterpieces. For a more interactive pick-me-up, try one of the MFA's Art in Bloom–related events, which include guided tours, floral demonstrations and lectures. There's also a preview party ($125), Jazz It Up, April 26, 7-11pm, with a swing band, cabaret, food and entertainment. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). Admission to the exhibition is $15.

SUN./APRIL 27

Music: What's in a Name?

What do Gang Starr, Run-D.M.C, Dilated Peoples and Grandmaster Flash have in common? They're all lastingly popular hip-hop acts whose names initially had fans scratching their heads, going, "Say what?" Now, here to add their name to that list, comes Blackalicious. Since the ear 1990s, the duo of producer Chief Xcel and rapper Gift of Ga have been banging out tracks that shake the mind as well a the behind. Their last album, Blazing Arrow, was a hit with critics as well as over- and underground hip-hop fans. More bounce to the ounce than you can pack in a sack, and choruses so catchy you'll find yourself singing them all the way home after the show and all the way to the record stor the next day. Axis, 13 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2437). 8pm, $17, 18+.

Far from Ailing

Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater returns

At Alvin Ailey's funeral in 1989, the poet Maya Angelou compared the dancer/choreographer's death to the fall of a great tree. Ailey's company, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, has thrived, however, and under the artistic direction of Ailey's former muse, Judith Jamison, it continues to perform a repertoire of ambitious and challenging pieces choreographed by established veterans as well as fresh talent.

"Dance is a universal language," says Ailey dancer Bahiyah Sayyed-Gaines. "It does not matter what language you speak, it's something that everyone gets. Through the movement of dance, we let you know that everyone has a variation of spirituality, of baptism, of going to church. It's universal."

Since 1968, the company has returned to Boston 33 times, and its upcoming weeklong run will feature the Boston premiere of Black Milk, a quintet piece that features drama and symbolism along with physically demanding dancing. Choreographed by Ohad Naharin, Black Milk reveals what Ailey dancer Glenn Sims calls "the true athleticism of the Alvin Ailey men." The Boston engagement will also feature a new interpretation of Billy Wilson's The Winter in Lisbon, a lively ballet set to the music of jazz legend Dizzy Gillespie. Witnessing a performance of Wilson's energetic piece in the early 1990s inspired Sims to pursue a career in dancing. "I just remember seeing it and thinking I wanted to do that. It's amazing that 10 years later I'm performing [the piece]."

Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater returns to Boston this year as part of FleetBoston's Celebrity Series. Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Tue, 7:30pm; Wed.-Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 3pm. April 22-27. $30-$65.

DEAD MAN WALKING

Billy Bob headlines the involving Levity

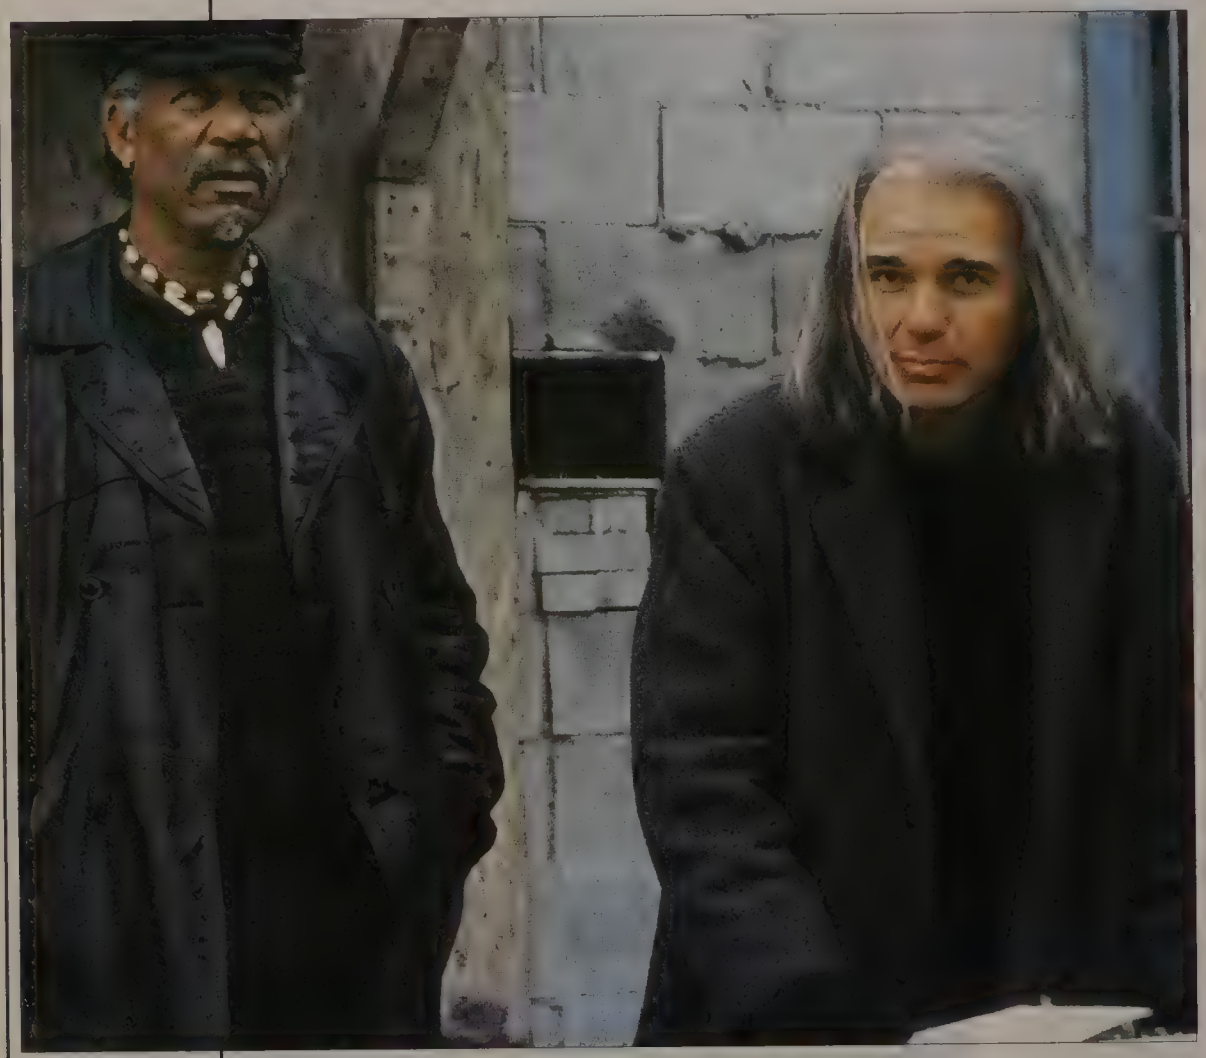
BY PAUL SHERMAN

To say that Billy Bob Thornton plays Manual Jordan, his beaten-down character in Levity, is slightly misleading. He doesn't so much play the guy as wear him, like the old overcoat the ex-con almost always has draped over himself. Manual is all body language; there's death in his eyes, and it seems to have spread throughout his body. But that's not surprising, given that death weighs so heavily on his mind.

When we first meet Manual, he's in prison. As a teenager, he took part in a convenience store robbery and impulsively shot and killed a young clerk. He keeps a newspaper picture of his victim on the wall of his cell as a reminder, and we see the incident in flashback when he's haunted by ghostlike visions of his victim (Luke Robertson).

"I know what I did, and I don't want forgiveness from you, or anyone else," Manual says in voice-over as we see him in his cell. But then he's faced with the very thing he wasn't asking for. The parole board tells him they're setting him free after 23 years; in so many words, they forgive him. That does little to brighten Manual's world, though.



Billy Bob Thornton (right) and Morgan Freeman play characters seeking redemption in the drama Levity.

Not content to have paid his debt to society, Manual tries to insinuate himself into the life of Adele (Holly Hunter), the sister of his victim. As he's trying to get involved in her life, another person is trying to get involved in his. That's Miles (Morgan Freeman), a sinner-turned-preacher who happens to be on the other end of a ringing pay phone that Manual answers. Miles is looking for someone else, but he ends up hiring Manual to watch the parking lot in a seedy part of town where Miles lets club kids park, so long as they come into his community center and listen to him preach for 15 minutes before heading to the club across the street. Miles—who, with his pinkie rings and puka shell necklace, resembles an Iceberg Slim–style, pimpin' preacher—not only hires Manual but also gives him a place to stay and watches over him like a guidance counselor.

The relationships in Levity put Manual in a dramatic position. First, he's on the receiving end of Miles' sermonizing. Yet, with the preacher's example right in front of him, Manual can't work up the nerve to spill his guts to unsuspecting Adele, once he gets to know her. Manual's other major relationship in Levity is with Sofia (Kirsten Dunst), a self-destructive club kid he regularly has to carry to her car or drive home, and whom he starts hounding about getting straight.

It's this complexity in character—people not behaving the same way in all of their relationships—that gives Levity an unusual emotional realism. That realism lets the movie develop a remarkably organic sense of spirituality, not just in Miles' surly sermons but in Manual's realization that life is made up of a series of choices that have consequences, both to others and to those who make them. Levity is the most convincingly spiritual American movie since 1997's haunting (and little-seen) Eye of God, another film with an intimate focus and a humanistic sensibility.

This involving drama comes from an unexpected source, first-time writer-director Ed Solomon, previously the writer of Men in Black and the Bill & Ted movies (not that Bill and Ted weren't spiritually righteous dudes). Despite his past credits, the title of Levity refers not to humor but to Manual's quest to unburden himself of his emotional baggage. Although the movie's ending is overly tidy in some ways, it finds a way to give Manual some relief without letting him off the moral hook—all while keeping us dramatically hooked. Levity is no one's idea of a popcorn movie, but it has the lean drama of existential TV series like The Fugitive or Kung Fu. I'd like to see more of Manual, walking the earth and exploring the morality of daily life. iB

Levity ★★★½

Written and directed by Ed Solomon. With Billy Bob Thornton, Holly Hunter, Morgan Freeman and Kirsten Dunst. Rated R. Sony Pictures Classics.

New Releases

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Basic ★½
When a movie offers an unreliable narrator—as Auto Focus, Adaptation or Confessions of a Dangerous Mind—the results can be adventurous and exciting. But when a movie itself is shifty and manipulative, it can be annoying. Like Basic. About the best thing you can say for this thriller, in which John Travolta investigates a crime on a military base, is that it's a tad better than The General's Daughter, the groaner that also gave us that premise. This one is cheesily directed by John "I remade Rollerball" McTiernan and culminates in the most unconvincing twist ending since Liza's wedding. Meanwhile, Travolta (who's good here) and Pulp Fiction co-star Sam Jackson (who's not) are onscreen together for all of a minute. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between two cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississippi Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—gets trotted out yet again in director Gurinder Chadha's latest, which can't compare to her Bhaji on the Beach, but which is still involving. Parminder Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, the Indian-English teen with soccer skill and two Sikh parents who won't allow her to pursue such a nontraditional female endeavor. When she's recruited to play for a local women's team, with the possibility of discovery by an American pro team, the scene is set for lots of running around behind her parents' back and comic mishaps—in fact, an awful lot of repetitive running around and mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) and Keira Knightley (as her teammate and sometime rival), as well as Chadra's sense of compassion, help dignity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a late Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of the lusty, laugh-filled spoof of the Roaring Twenties in which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was a great career move, Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jail, and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the slick-scale shyster with all the answers. All three know how to manipulate truth, justice and the American way through performance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
The title refers to the Rio de Janeiro slum where the action takes place, as God-forsaken a place as you'll ever find. But the movie is as rich as its setting is impoverished. Bold and brutal from start to finish, a dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall New York Streets and Amores Perros, as its stories stories criss-cross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash that you just can't stop watching. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Core ★★
This oafish save-the-world movie might have you checking the calendar. It feels exactly like a mediocre summer movie. Although the cast—including Aaron Eckhart, Hilary Swank and Delroy Lindo, is more interesting than that of most science fiction movies, after a while even their charms can't carry this generic story of averted scientific doom. And there's a lot of "while" here, as the movie drags on for more than two hours. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Dreamcatcher ★★
There are familiar elements in the latest Stephen King adaptation: childhood friends, beasts, snowy pine trees and Maine (though this was filmed in Canada). But the combination is awfully tedious this time around. The friends (Thomas Jane, Jason Lee, Timothy Olyphant and Damian Lewis) are grown now, but their thoughts often trigger flashbacks to when they were boys, and when the retarded boy (Andrew Robb) they befriended gave them telepathic powers. It seems the boy gave the others the powers because he knew they would use them to save the world during an alien invasion. But that sounds farfetched, it comes off a lot better than the clunky dialogue between Morgan Freeman and Tom Sizemore, who play the military men trying to contain the aliens. This one plods along and never gets very interesting. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Dysfunktional Family ★★
Like Eddie Murphy and Martin Lawrence, Eddie Griffin dons leather and goes onstage for the black stand-up comic's rite of passage: the concert movie inspired by Richard Pryor. While this might have been edited down into an amusing half-hour cable special, Griffin's material is too stereotype-dependent to be consistently funny. His emphasis on material about his colorful relatives yields some laughs, but not enough to make sitting through this worthwhile. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Good Thief ★★★
You didn't need last year's infamous mug shot to know that Nick Nolte had tumbled off the wagon. You just had to check out this movie, which like the Nolte films of the late 1980s, gauges his lack of sobriety by the unintelligibility of his words. He hasn't made you say "Huh?" this much since Teachers. But at least his mumbling fits the role. Neil Jordan's remake of the 1955 French film Bob Le Flambeur—one of the coolest movies ever made—casts Nolte as the down-and-out crook who goes cold turkey in order to pull one last score while dodging an eager cop (Tcheky Karyo) and flirting with a sweet young thing (Nutsa Kukhiani) he's rescued from the streets. It's hardly a one-of-a-kind movie like the original, but it's sleek, fast-moving and always entertaining. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Guys ★★★
The first movie to directly deal with the Sept. 11 attacks has an appealing simplicity. It's based on the experiences of writer Anne Nelson, who helped a New York fire captain write the eulogies of several men who died in the World Trade Center. Sigourney Weaver plays the writer here, and Anthony LaPaglia the firefighter. Most of the movie is just the two of them, with the first asking the second about the dead men he worked with. These scenes are somber yet moving, and never over-the-top. If the movie overreaches emotionally, it's in the scenes of Weaver's character writing at her laptop later on, which seem overwrought compared with the more effective scenes with LaPaglia. (At Boston Common.)

Laurel Canyon ★★
If I were a director and had the chance to trade up Ally Sheedy for Frances McDormand, I'd do it in a flash. But I don't know if I'd practically remake my Sheedy movie with McDormand in it. Here, Lisa Cholodenko rehashes much of the plot of her indie hit High Art, in which a naive young woman enters the bohemian circle of an older woman (Sheedy's character). In the writer-director's first film since, the young woman is Kate Beckinsale's post-grad med student, who finds more appeal in her fiancé's free-spirited record-producer mom (McDormand) than in finishing her dissertation after she and the fiancé (Christian Bale) move out west and temporarily bunk with the mother. The retread factor mingles with movie cliches like the doctor who's great at sorting out everyone's life but his own and the parent-child relationship in which the child is the responsible one. McDormand's typically rich performance is the lone bright spot. (At Kendall Square.)

Malibu's Most Wanted ★★½
Everybody's strapped to a nine iron in the hometown of B-Rad, Jamie Kennedy's amusing white rapper wannabe. But when his Malibu dad (Ryan O'Neal) runs for governor of California, B-Rad (Bradley is his "slave name," he protests) is deemed too much of an embarrassment. So dad's campaign staff hires two black actors (Anthony Anderson and Taye Diggs) to pose as gangstas, kidnap B-Rad, take him to the hood and "scare the black out of him." The laughs are spotty at times, but they're more plentiful and more clever than anything in Bringing Down the House, that other recent race relations comedy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Marion Bridge ★★★
The terrific Molly Parker (Kissed, TV's Twitch City and Six Feet Under) headlines this drama, as the bad seed who returns to Nova Scotia to be with her two grown sisters (Rebecca Jenkins and Stacy Smith) and help care for their dying mother (Marguerite McNeil). She also tries to come to terms with her own tragic and wild past. Like most of the best Canadian movies, this keeps the drama down-to-earth and steers clear of fist-pumping emotional victories. Maybe that's why it's so convincing. (At the Coolidge Corner.)

Morvern Callar ★★
Samantha Morton has already made an involving drama in which she played a young woman struggling to grieve for the loss of a loved one, Under the Skin. Now the Sweet and Lowdown and Minority Report actress has made a dull drama in which she plays a young woman struggling to grieve for the loss of a loved one. This time, she's an English woman living in Scotland whose writer-boyfriend commits suicide on Christmas Eve. This sends Morton's title character on an emotional journey that involves selling her boyfriend's unpublished novel (after she's claimed authorship), taking a trip to Spain and yielding to the desire to escape everyday drudgery. The movie is mainly about what's going on inside Morvern's head, and, not surprisingly, Morton knows how to portray fragility—that's her thing. But, as in her earlier Ratcatcher, writer-director Lynne Ramsay offers many moments that would seem super in a different context, but the movie is so sluggish that it's a chore to get through them. (At Kendall Square.)

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work. Based on the memoir of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played by Oscar winner Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939. It also details how the title character managed to stay alive through being stripped of rights and crammed into the Warsaw ghetto, seeing his family "deported" to concentration camps, and hiding out for months at a time while locked into apartments the Nazis thought are empty. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Stevie ★★★
If Steve (Hoop Dreams) James' latest documentary weren't so well made, it could have come off like an episode of Jerry Springer. Nothing against Jerry, but James gets a more intimate, complex look at family feuding here. The movie is about James' attempt to reconnect with the title "character," the once-troubled child to whom he was a Big Brother. James finds Stevie in his twenties and as troubled as ever, living with his stepgrandmom and down the street from the mother he blames for all his problems. But James' attempt to be a positive influence on Stevie doesn't last very long. After Stevie is charged with sexually abusing a child, the movie becomes a fascinating and heartbreaking look at the attempt to salvage the good in someone capable of being so bad. (At Kendall Square.)

Tupperware! ★★★
Local filmmaker Laurie Kahn-Leavitt zips us back to the 1950s, when Massachusetts inventor Earl Tupper and go-getter Brownie Wise rallied a legion of housewives to sell the plastic containers that ruled the world. Before women's lib, Tupperware sales parties were a gateway to earnings and empowerment for women, and Wise was the most powerful female executive in the country. Through interviews with Tupperware ladies, amazing clips from company films and a heavy dose of vintage song (thanks to WMBR's John Funke), Kahn-Leavitt evokes the country's post-war materialism and the opportunities Tupperware presented to thousands of working-class women. (At the Museum of Fine Arts, April 24 and 26.)

BEYOND THAT JAZZ

Ute Lemper builds on the Berlin cabaret tradition with contemporary personality

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Ute Lemper sang in the musical Chicago in both London and on Broadway, inhabiting the character of the murderous vamp Velma Kelly, recently an Oscar-winning film role for Catherine Zeta-Jones. But Lemper hasn't seen Oscar's new Best Picture.

"Everybody's expecting me to have seen it, but I had an overdose of Chicago," the German-born chanteuse admits by phone after a London concert. "And I truly enjoyed the show. It's a great vehicle, a great satire on something which is still contemporary, the corruptive justice system and the lies in the court, that money is power and power is money. I will see [the film] eventually, probably on an airplane."

As for the Velma Kelly role, for which Lemper received the 1998 Olivier Award for Best Actress in a London musical, she adds, "The villain is always the interesting part."

Lemper surely knows how to flaunt her dark and outrageous side onstage, prompting critics to use such descriptions as "hints of the tigress" and "the edge of stylized madness."

But the New York–based Lemper, who plays the Berklee Performance Center April 26, adds, "There are elements of everything in me—quiet, transparent, puristic and humble, straightforward elements. In a concert, you can play all the keys on your piano.

"That's what I really like to do the most, as opposed to musicals and stuff," says Lemper, 39, who cut her teeth in European productions of Cabaret, Peter Pan and Cats. "In an evening, I travel through a whole array of dramatic songs from different cultures, with completely different passions and emotion, from comic to provocative to satirical to rebellious, and it has socio-political background."

Ute Lemper's new album, But One Day..., includes four of her own songs in addition to cabaret classics.

In other words, while she is known as a "cabaret" star, Lemper associates herself with the European tradition behind that term, not its American connotations.

"The term cabaret, like the music of Cabaret, is political satire out of the European territory, starting in the Weimar Republic [of Germany]. So if you choose that [meaning], then yes, cabaret would be the right word for me," she says. "Cabaret, if you use the term in America, is a very special genre, and I've chosen never really to sing [like that] in piano bars and hotels. That has never been my territory. It always was theaters."

Indeed, Lemper is a renowned interpreter of Berlin cabaret songs, the French chanson and the works of Kurt Weill.

"There's always a piece of Berlin in everything I do," says Lemper, who lived in Berlin through the mid-1980s. "Berlin is a scarred city which was destroyed in the war, and had this very exotic life, and it was a very ugly city, reconstructed so fast after the war, with no architectural charm at all. I still think that Berlin was the most cruel and realistic and passionate city in all of Germany."

Lemper's latest CD, But One Day..., includes Weill's "September Song" and "Speak Low," though she says, "It's imposed on me somehow, the tradition that I follow, that you have to put Weill on it. I just tried to sing them very weird and almost a little crazy and out of my mind, to give them a different aspect."

Recorded in New York and London, the disc is a mix of the old and new, each informed by the other. In addition to singing classics by Weill, Jacques Brel and Hanns Eisler, she updates two songs by the modern tango pioneer Astor Piazzolla with lyrics in English. And for the first time, she also recorded four self-penned songs.

"I never had thought about writing music before," she says. "I didn't have the permission somehow. I was this singer of this historical, authentic music for so many years."

The turning point came when she recorded songs by Tom Waits, Nick Cave and Elvis Costello on her previous CD, Punishing Kiss. "I became more contemporary, and then I said, 'Well, now I've got to go all the way. I must do my own songs.' I play piano anyway, and improvisations. I have strong visions about music, and it was just the most natural thing to do."

But One Day... wraps Lemper's bold, malleable voice in rich, exquisite strings, arranged by keyboardist Peter Scherer in New York. "Sometimes you think it's an art song," she says. "[The music] has elements of Debussy and Ravel, then suddenly it's this contemporary groove underneath." The New York sessions, in turn, inspired producer Robert Ziegler's treatment of the CD's theater standards in a London studio.

Lemper's talent also extends to painting—an exhibition of her work is about to open in Washington, D.C. "Most of the paintings are expressionist, and quite wild in colors and angles," she says. "Each of the paintings could be a song, and each song could be a painting. It's very connected." iB

Takes Three to Tengo

Yo La Tengo brings Summer Sun to Boston

Three-piece space-pop outfit Yo La Tengo is at the Roxy April 16.

Guitarist Ira Kaplan and drummer Georgia Hubley of the legendary space-pop trio Yo La Tengo have been making sweet music onstage and off for more than 18 years. Married for more than a decade, the pair's harmonious interplay manifests in transporting melodies, articulate beats and endearing narratives, at times serene, at times tumultuous, that seemingly draw on the nuances of married life. Whether or not the couple's private life plays out on their records is something Kaplan prefers to leave to the listener's interpretation. He simply notes that the lyrics, like the band's sound, are a product of the close-knit relationship all the members share.

Yo La Tengo (Spanish for "I've got it") went through several incarnations early on, but the current three-piece lineup, with bassist James McNew, has been in place since 1991. The band initially drew comparisons to the Velvet Underground for the fuzz-driven sound of its 1986 debut LP Ride the Tiger and Kaplan's sing-speak delivery. The parallels persisted strongly enough that the trio was hired to portray members of Lou Reed's influential art rock outfit in the 1996 film I Shot Andy Warhol. By now, though, Yo La Tengo has dabbled in so many genres—from twang-laden alt-country, to no-frills indie pop and electronica—that it has become the measuring stick by which other like-minded acts are gauged, playing muse to a new generation of songwriters as the Velvet Underground did before them.

Countless singles, EPs, collaborations and guest appearances aside, Yo La Tengo has released 11 full-length albums to date; the latest, Summer Sun, is just out on Matador Records. "Thematically, we noticed a lot of seasonal references in the lyrics," says Kaplan explaining the album's motif. "I liked the idea of declaring this a summer record when in a lot of ways it's not what most people would expect. I don't think anyone's going to mistake this for California Girls." Diverging from the lush sonic excursions found on 2000's And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside-Out, Summer Sun's breezy melodies and lighthearted song titles at first obscure the stormy sentiments brewing beneath the surface. Hubley summons swells of nostalgia on "Today Is the Day," lilting, "Remember how you used to say/'Can't stay up late'/A minute later and I'm older now/Can't stay awake."

One aspect of Yo La Tengo's music that continues to enthrall fans is the band's ever-evolving sound, each album drawing on a varying set of styles. "There is no plan," Kaplan says of the band's songwriting process. "We do a lot of, I guess, jamming in our practice room. One thing that shaped this record was that we obtained a piano. That worked into our new material in a way that it never had before. It wasn't like we said 'let's get a piano' because we wanted it to be all over our next record. We got the piano and then it was." April 16, Roxy, 279 Tremont St., Boston (617-931-2000). 9pm, $15.—Daniel Schulman

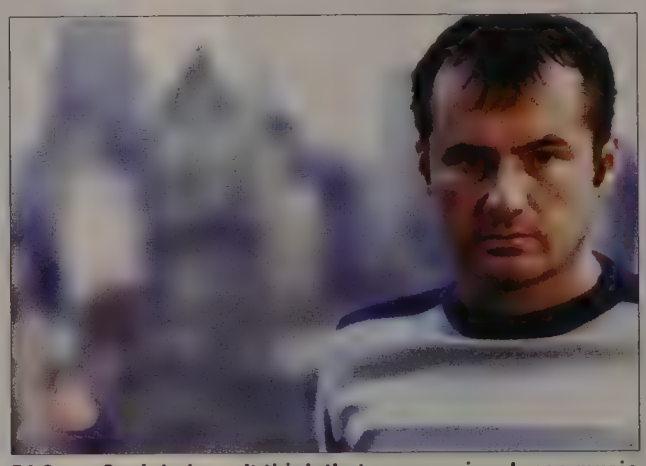
Outspoken Insider

Sean Cusick pushes the progressive dance music envelope

New York's Sean Cusick, who occasionally goes by the moniker Q6, is a curious figure in the realm of dance music. Cusick was introduced to the genre over a decade ago in Orlando, Fla., an early hotbed of progressive dance music in the United States. In fact, much of today's commercialized "underground" club culture can trace its roots back to the Florida scene of the early '90s.



DJ Sean Cusick doesn't think that progressive dance music has been all that progressive lately.

Cusick's subsequent work as both a DJ and a studio artist has earned him worldwide recognition. In the DJ booth, he has held sway over dance floors in the U.S., Europe and South America. In the recording studio, his original production credits include releases on Hallucination, John Digweed's Bedrock imprint and Satoshi Tomiie's SAW Recordings. Despite these measures of success, however, Cusick is an outspoken critic of what he sees as a growing lack of focus on forward-thinking music. Cusick routinely extends a figurative middle finger to the progressive club scene in interviews and in his monthly column on the dance music Web site www.Xpander.nl.

As Cusick pushes the fringes of popular progressive music, a growing buzz has come from like-minded fans. He creates angular dance music—throbbing, dark and twisted trips that lend renewed meaning to the term "progressive." Nevertheless, he says he tries not to associate himself with the dreaded P word. "I love house and techno, but I try to sneak in other things here and there if the crowd seems receptive to it," says Cusick. "Pretty much, the best records that I can find are in my DJ bag, and I put them together in any way that will work. I've never been the best mixer technically, so I try to rely more on programming and putting the records in an order that works, blending moods. Most of all, I try to have fun with what I'm doing."

Sean Cusick makes a guest appearance on Tuesday, April 22nd, taking over the decks for Orange at The Kells, 161 Brighton Ave, Brighton (617-782-9082). Orange residents John Davis and Tym Ryan will warm things up, starting around 10 pm.—Daniel Spurling

Very Cute Abercrombie Girl

It was the morning of March 7 at the Faneuil Hall Abercrombie & Fitch store. You had red hair and a great smile. I was the blonde in uniform. We were talking about the smashed front door of the store while somebody was looking for a pair of jeans for me. I was too shy to ask for your number. If you would like to get together for coffee or something, drop me a line.

Lucky on the Red Line

It was St. Patrick's Day morning around 8:30. I entered the T at Davis Square. I had been wearing a black coat but got hot and took it off, exposing my green shirt and a green beaded necklace with a plastic shamrock. I was standing; you were sitting across from me. You were wearing a purple button-down shirt and a black jacket. I thought I noticed you looking my way and found you very attractive. I wrote my name and number down to give you but chickened out when I got to my stop (Charles/MGH). I have been thinking of you since and wondering if I'd run into you again. If this sounds like you, and you are interested in meeting, please e-mail.

Hamersley's on a Friday

I was the ash blonde wearing a pink diaphanous dress and red spike heels standing in the bar at Hamersley's on the evening of March 28, just having a glass of wine and a conversation with a few of my friends before we went to a house party in the South End. You were the fat middle-aged guy with the loud tie and donkey laugh who kept looking over at me and half-winking with your business buddies. You slid past me four times in 45 minutes, to go to the bathroom or whatever excuse you were using to get close to me. Each time you passed me, you purposely grazed your pathetic pelvis against my behind and breathed on the back of my neck. I'm sure you thought you were getting me all hot at the thought of spending the night with you before you went home to your wife and kids in Kansas City or Buffalo or wherever you were in the Big City from. Well, I just wanted to let you in on a little secret, sport. I'm a guy named Hank who just likes to feel pretty once in a while. See, you never know.

The Lost Keeper

At Fajitas 'n' Ritas after work, we shared a pitcher of margaritas and an incredible conversation. It was electric and magical. I was stunned by how we clicked on so many levels. You are one of the most beautiful women I have ever met. I left saying to myself, "That one is a keeper." But I lost your number in the craziness that is my life. I want to reconnect to see if the magic can keep on going.

Saint's Silver Room

We met Feb. 8 at Saint. You are blond, tall and recently moved to Boston from North Carolina. You were with friends from a basketball league for lawyers that you play in, even though you're not a lawyer. You saved me from having to talk to a 40-year-old man about his kids all night. We sneaked away from our friends and got to know each other in the Silver Room. I've thought of you often and decided to give fate a little push. E-mail me.

Rainy Night in Boston

We met March 29 at Emily's on the dance floor. You: tall, dark, handsome with a great smile and a very common name. Me: cute, petite, thirsty, brunette with a unique name. Our conversation was brief but I enjoyed meeting you. I heard guys from Rochester aren't all that bad. The end of the night came, and we went our separate ways without exchanging numbers. Drop me a line and maybe we can connect sometime.

Fratboy from Afar...

I first saw you in February at the Rack and was instantly drawn to your irresistibly preppy good looks (although you do uncannily resemble a frat boy from the '80s...). You left your brown leather jacket on all night despite the heat and the crowd of attractive young singles who flocked to your side on the dance floor. A friend told me you went to Yale. I asked her in what era...then I found out you're only 27! As far as your education goes, I wouldn't have cared if you were a garbageman or a millionaire; I like you: period. I "heart" your dorky yet magnetic style and just wanted to let you know that seeing you walk down the street is my secret cure for a bad day.

To the Major League Lacrosse Player

This message is for Ryan, who's a player for the Boston Cannons. I met you at An Tua Nua on March 29. Once you introduced yourself, we hit it off. We danced and talked for a while, but as the bar closed my ride was leaving so we never got the chance to exchange our info. Hopefully if you're still interested in this little hottie, you'll e-mail me.

In search of Jess from Wellesley....

We met briefly at the bar at the Last Drop in Brighton on March 30. You were the raven-haired beauty, and I was the guy in the Red Sox hat, gray shirt and khakis. We talked briefly and then we each had to go: You to return to your friend at the end of the bar (whom you were driving home) and me to entertain my friend's wife (no, not nearly like it sounds). We agreed that I would find you and we would chat some more later in the evening. Well, I looked for you at the end of the bar, but I could not find you. Needless to say, I was quite taken by you and I would very much like to see you again and continue our conversation.

Mexican Prince

It's been one year, eleven months and eighteen days, and ever since you placed those luscious lips on mine, I knew you were the one. No one knew we could make it this far, but look at us now. We are more in love than ever. I want you to know that I will be with you no matter where you are. Although the Navy is taking you from me, I will wait for you and keep you in my heart and mind always. I can't wait to see you in your uniform, handsome. And I will marry my high-school sweetheart. I want to grow old with you. I love you.
—Your Colombian princess

Admirals Club Admirer

Seattle to Boston April 3: We were in the American Airlines Admirals Club in Seattle. You were tall, with brown hair and a tan, wearing a dark suit and a pastel blue tie. I was blond, tall, wearing a black suit. I nearly ran you over in the doorway. How excited I was when I noticed you were leaving the club with me and getting on the very same flight to Boston! And then... First class separated us. And I wasn't the one that got the first-class seat! If it hadn't been for th "imaginary curtain" I would have certainly approached you. I can only imagine that you are engage or otherwise tied down. But there was no ring, so I had to take this chance. I thought you were amazing. E-mail me.

Rockie Horoscope

APRIL 16 – 29, 2003

TAURUS
APRIL 20-MAY 20

A crisis concerning a friendship or your place in an organization could reach a pivotal point during this full moon period. You'll tend to be more practical than usual, perhaps a bit paranoid, simply because restrictive, responsible Saturn is shoving its weight around, leaning heavily on your easy-going Venus ruler. After Easter, as Venus moves from "pity poor me" Pisces to adventurous Aries, your mood will brighten considerably. Soon you'll be looking for romance in all the fun places.

GEMINI
MAY 21-JUNE 20

Fair warning: Your Mercury ruler goes retrograde on April 26 and slowly creeps back to where it was last weekend before finally turning direct. Since what is happening now will become a big deal again when Mercury flips forward in mid-May, better pay extra attention to whatever you're presently dealing with. Also, try to get the usual pre-Mercury retrograde chores done as soon as possible, before the holidays disrupt the normal scheduling of events, gigs and due dates. How about inviting an old friend to come hang?

CANCER
JUNE 21-JULY 22

Now is the time for all good Crabs to come to the aid of their partner. The Aries-Libra full moon on the 16th focuses, as did the April Fools' new moon, on feisty Mars in your marriage house. In the past two weeks you've no doubt seen one or more aspects of your relationship build to a climax. Job, family, room to breathe—any or all of them could be issues that need to be resolved before the next new moon on May Day. And while your input may have been treated like a joke on April 1, it's absolutely crucial now. Help!

LEO
JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Call it aggravation or stimulation. When your sun ruler and militant Mars form a challenging square on the 17th, you're bound to get mad, although you might not be so sure about getting even. Whether your anger is directed at a co-worker, the dry cleaner or the medical profession is incidental. What is important is how motivated you'll become, how determined to get your licks in. FYI: Mercury goes retrograde in your career midheaven on the 26th. Since there won't be any progress regarding work, maybe you should take a spring break?

VIRGO
AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Read for Gemini. Therein lies the tale of your Mercury ruler's progress and reversal in Taurus, and what you can do now to avoid the pitfalls of a confused mindset later. While the Messenger is in start-stop-start mode, matters dealing with travel and education should be handled with care, if not kid gloves. However, if you need to revise a proposal or a grant application, retrograde is an excellent time to make the necessary changes. But for the moment, look for a gift from the Libra full moon.

LIBRA
SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

The full moon in your own sign heightens your receptivity to everyone else's emotional extravaganzas. And dump on you they will! Add your own case of mild hysteria to the mix and it's obvious that the 2003 Easter holiday week will be memorable. Because Mars in your home base is making folks there mad, be extra careful around the house. Cuts and burns, digs and barbs are par for the course; their intensity and the serious damage they can do now are not. Coming soon, a resolution that'll suit the entire family.

SCORPIO
OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

If it weren't for the fact that both your ruling planets are "lit" by the Aries-Libra full moon on the 16th, you could get through Easter week without any hassle. Although your Pluto co-ruler is attracting money and nice, probably recycled, stuff, your Mars co-ruler is under undue stress. Commuting, communicating and dealing with relatives and neighbors can result in painful, destructive experiences. You're bound to get ticked off, and while the battle might be enjoyable on one level, who needs the aggravation?

SAGITTARIUS
NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

"How do I love thee? Let me count the ways." Later, that is. The love fest that takes place during the annual opposition of the ardent Aries sun and the affectionate Libra moon brings all sorts of attractive people and fiery emotions to the fore. This is as sociable and accepting as you're going to get—well, maybe when the Libra sun opposes the Aries moon in October you'll happily embrace as many people. While you can, ride the good vibe to the max, pay the piper if you have to, and exert the effort to make everyone comfortable at home.

CAPRICORN
DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

This full moon can impact your personal life in more ways than one. The polarity between the Libra moon in your career midheaven and the Aries sun at home plate puts you in a tight squeeze. Domestic affairs may get in the way of your ambition. What makes this annual opposition different from previous ones is the addition of heroic Mars in your sign. This year, you're itching to fight for your right to, what? A solution to the problem, relief from the tension, comes from your partner. Inquire within.

AQUARIUS
JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Full moons do not pass unnoticed. They bring situations to a head, break discreet silences and, when properly aligned, send nutters to the ER. Not that you're in any danger, but the first full moon since your Uranus ruler went into hyper-emotional Pisces gives one cause to wonder… what's up? You'll know more once courageous Mars enters your unpredictable sign on the 21st. Also knowing that you'll be wearing the Martian chip on your shoulder for the next eight weeks can work to your advantage. It's quite sexy.

PISCES
FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

What you value, beyond monetary worth, becomes a big deal during this full moon period. It's a seasonal phenomenon, so you probably shouldn't glorify how you feel, but if you do, then go for the ultimate experience. Now that individualistic Uranus is in Pisces, you can do more outrageous things, be more creative and more admired by your peers than you've been in years. You may have a problem with a pal or an established organization, but don't dwell on it. By May Day, it'll pass.

ARIES
MARCH 20-APRIL 19

As the moon approaches total fullness, you can feel the excitement building. But Rams who are not yet in "do or die" mode will be by the afternoon of the 16th. The tension doesn't stem solely from having the sun-moon opposition in your sign—that happens every year. But this April, your Mars ruler plays a major role in the cosm scheme of things. While the Warrior dominates your Capricorn midheaven, you'll be more conscientious, wel organized and patient than you ever imagined. Imagine

LESLIE'S LINKS was founded in 1999 by Leslie Semonian who battled cancer and passed away in December of 1999 at the age of 32. During the eight and a half year period of her illness, until her death, Leslie never allowed cancer to stand in the way of her goal of helping others. She knew how precious life was and energetically embraced each day. She helped others to appreciate their own lives more. She wanted to be remembered as a participant in life not an observer. Her passion was boundless, and will continue in the hearts of the many friends and people whom she inspired.

Leslie's Links is a fund at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute which raises money for Ewings Sarcoma Cancer Research in various ways. One of which is through the Leslie's Links bike team associated with the 192-mile Pan-Mass Challenge bike-a-thon from Sturbridge to Provincetown. Leslie's Links has raised over half a million dollars since its inception in 1999.

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

Amy Nicholson finds alcohol-related confusion in England. Beer's taverns, she says, serve several types of london.

Red Sox manager Grady Little informs Andrew Bender, Chris Porter, Adam Ferrin and Kevin Pojasek that they did not make the 25-man roster in Clearwater, Fla.

Michigan Governor Jennifer Granholm neatly coordinates with the Spring Fashion issue.

The Kef G Entertainment girls establish a beachhead on Catalina Island, Dominican Republic. They met no resistance.

Kevin O'Donnell and Andrea Dittman do a little hemisphere-hopping in Nakuru, Kenya.

Rasmus Figenschou and Jorgen Von Tangen pose with an example of local ingenuity in Cuba: The car behind them is made entirely of seashells.

IMPROPER BOUNTY

BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER:
Roaming the streets of Rochester, England, dressed up as Oliver Twist, Nicholas Nickleby or even Little Dorrit at the Dickens Festival, held in late May.

Send color or b&w prints (min. 3x5) to: Improper Sightings, The Improper Bostonian Magazine, 142 Berkeley St., 3rd floor, Boston, MA 02116, or e-mail high resolution photos to: sightings@improper.com. Please include your name, address, phone number, e-mail and photo location. All photos become the property of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE and will not be returned.

Neal McDonough at the Big Fat Awards Gala.

HOORAY FOR HOLLYWOOD...

Like the Super Bowl and the Miss America pageant, the Academy Awards have a hype-to-spectacle ratio that makes them enjoyable to watch only with a lot of food, drinks and other people around to distract you. In other words, they're the perfect excuse to have a party, and philanthropically inclined Bostonians had two big ones to choose from.

At the Four Seasons, the Massachusetts Film Bureau held its Big Fat Awards Gala, which was co-hosted by Channel 5 anchor-vixen Liz Bruner and Kiss 108 morning mouth Matt Siegel. The party's special guest star, who auctioned off an array of enticing big-ticket items, was icy-blue-eyed Dorchester homey-gone-Hollywood Neal McDonough of NBC's Boomtown, and other guests included his stockbroker brother, Kieran, with his drop-dead gorgeous wife, Anja; financial mack daddy Richard DeAgazio and retired restaurant mogul Marty Bloom.

Meanwhile, over at the Rack, the Official Oscar Night America Party, a fundraiser for the breast cancer charity the Ellie Fund, was in full swing. Its diversions included the option of playing pool, an elaborate movie-themed silent auction, and a surreal and inexplicable surprise appearance by the almost lifelike Evan Marriott. For anyone whose mind doesn't collect trivia like a lint trap: He was the guy on Joe Millionaire.

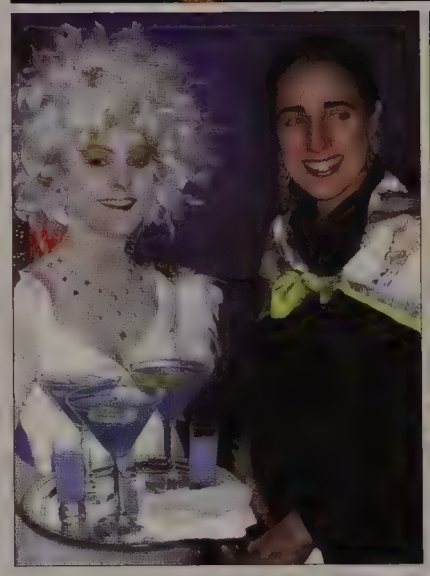
Present and accounted for: peripatetic party planner Zvi Cole, the impossible-to-dislike Jeff Popkin, glamazon extraordinaire Carol Lindenmuth, the eternally smiley Gene Goldman, the improbably tall Christopher Ellsworth, Tunisian funboy Taher Bouzayen, nightclub proprietor Harry Harding and so on and so forth.

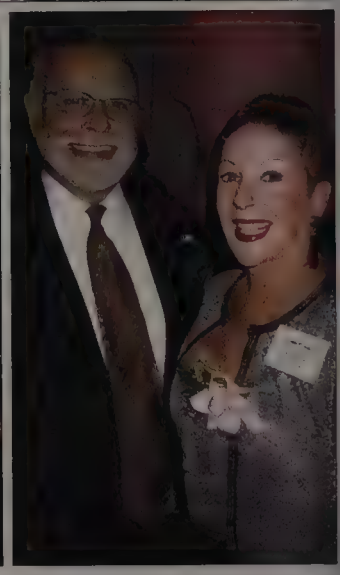
Needless to say, both parties offered an excellent distraction from the stupendously boring awards ceremony, and no sooner was Best Picture announced than everybody heaved a collective sigh of relief and headed for home.

PARTYING IS SUCH SWEET SORROW...

Approaching maximum fabulosity is probably the best way to describe the Boston Center for the Arts fundraiser, Hubbub, which featured a lavish spread of food and drinks and a showcase of visual and performing arts, including aerial dancers and a soloist from Boston Ballet, in a gasp-inducing setting.

Held at the Cyclorama, the cavernous circular space was divided into four separate areas: an icy heaven where sushi and blue martinis were served, a bright red hell with fiery Asian food and lava lamps, a garden of Eden with tons of flowers and plants and a face-painted bartender mixing Mojitos, and an area that resembled a first-class departure lounge in a James Bond movie. In the middle were café tables and bleachers, and milling around it all were such various and sundry social stalwarts as the party's diamond bedecked co-chair, Sharyn Fireman and her other half, photographer Murton Sudalter; white-hot architect David Hacin and his other half, the very fabulous Tim Grafft; über arts supporter Bill Nigreen; the delightful Thaleia Tsongas Schlesinger; Cowan cutie Sarah Koerner; dance visionary Jeremy Alliger, and one woman who said, "I had to bribe my husband to get him to come here this evening, and now he's telling me to go home without him."





At Hubbub, clockwise from upper left: Michelle Baxter and Scott Lima; David Hacin, Thaleia Tsongas Schlesinger and Tim Grafft; Murton Sudalter and Sharyn Fireman; aerial dancers; an ice princess and Molly Dunne.

THINGS WE'D RATHER NOT THINK ABOUT...

Overheard at Heart & Soul, the superb concert by the Boston Gay Men's Chorus that featured an appearance by Tony award winner Lilias White and provoked one (well-deserved) standing ovation after another:

"This must be the only Symphony Hall program in history with an ad for K-Y personal lubricant."

WHERE THE BOYS ARE...

What happens when 1,400 gay men don tuxedos and congregate in a hotel ballroom?

The answer could be found at a fundraiser held at the Westin for the Fenway Community Health Center. One could variously describe The Men's Event as a prom where everyone's queen, a circuit party on its best behavior or a black-tie preview party for summer in Provincetown.

The high-profile homos and their hombres on hand included co-chairs Jeff Coakley and Philip Finch; Providence mayor David Cicilline; super-cute Club Café co-owner Paul Spyrka; Channel 5 heartthrob David Brown; interior design avatar Dennis Duffy; the best-dressed restaurateur in the western hemisphere, Gary Sullivan; preppy playboy Skip Hughes; former Congressman Gerry Studds and his partner, Dean Hara; hairstylist and hipster William George; Harvard factotum Bob Mitchell; Channel 7 studmuffin Randy Price, and one woman who looked around at the crowd and sighed, "Water, water, everywhere..." iB

—LAUREN DEMORE
CHARLESTOWN

JESSICA PURSLEY

Photographer Jessica Pursley has been shooting fashion for publications, as well as advertising campaigns for designers, boutiques and record companies, for more than 15 years. "I love the glitz and glamour of the industry," she says, "but the most fulfilling part about my job is the emotional connection you make with your subject for the brief moment they are in front of your camera." Her latest work can be seen in this issue's fashion spread, "The Elements of Style," on page 32.

ONE MORE BARTENDER TO BELOVE

While your choices for Boston's Beloved Bartenders were very on-target this year, I feel that one relatively new bartender was left out of your pool: Matt from Bambara. Not only is Matt incredibly charming, personable and very good looking, but he made me the best damned drink I have ever had, which he called a Berries and Cream martini. And he makes the best bellini this side of Harry's. If Matt missed out this year, he should certainly be in contention for next year.

—LAUREN DEMORE

THE DRESS ADDRESS

I'm wondering where I can get the pink dress on the Beloved Bartenders cover. How much is it?

—CHERYL
Via e-mail

Editor's Note: That Robin Jordan dress ($159) and black bow belt by Prairie New York ($60) are available at Holiday, 127 Charles Street, 617-973-9730.

I KNOW KURT MASUR, AND YOU SIR ARE NO KURT MASUR

On page 90 of the April 16 issue of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, the caption below a photograph states "Kurt Masur leads the BSO." I don't know who the individual in the photograph is, but he is definitely not Kurt Masur.

I imagine that your staff is a) mostly under 30 years old, and b) unfamiliar with world-renowned conductors of classical music, but if all those grey-haired guys look the same, having a fact checker would definitely help!

—UTA RENZ
Boston

Editor's Note: Did we say Kurt Masur? We totally meant to say Emanuel Ax, who is not a conductor but a dude who plays one of those big old-fashioned wooden keyboard things that we like to skateboard on while fact-checking and listening to our Kelly Osbourne MP3s.

CORRECTION

Beloved Bartender Lisa Holzemer's name was misspelled last issue.

FROM THE EDITOR

If you're planning to take a vacation this summer but haven't made reservations yet, join the crowd. According to the Travel Industry Association of America, nearly half of Americans who plan to travel this spring and summer still had not booked their trips as of late April.

Tourism officials in some of this area's most popular vacation spots—the Cape and Islands—say they're noticing the trend but remain optimistic that bookings, while delayed, will be strong. "The benefits for Massachusetts are that a huge percentage of the visitors stay the same from year to year and are within driving distance," says Robin Rushnell of the Martha's Vineyard Chamber of Commerce. "While people may be waiting longer to book, they will book."

The reason for the delayed bookings, TIA surveys indicate, is the sluggish economy more than the recent war. TIA also finds that interest in travel by car and in shorter trips (three or fewer nights) is up, continuing the post–Sept. 11 trend.

Even if you intend to take a longer trip this summer, chances are you'll want to squeeze in a weekend getaway or two (after such a brutal winter, enjoying summer seems all the more urgent) and that's where this issue can help you. For our "R&R" feature (page 16) IMPROPER staffers Erin Hagedorn and Ezra Dyer explored four New England destinations; they offer complete weekend itineraries for each that can save you precious planning time.

If outstanding food tops the list of your vacation must-haves, take a look at certified foodie Carolyn Faye Fox's "Driven to Dine" feature (page 26). She describes four New England restaurants worthy of a trip, and her descriptions of their fare will have you dialing for reservations before you can say pan-seared foie gras.

Even your summer outlet-shopping trip to Freeport or Kittery can become a weekend adventure, with stops at lesser-known spots—from country stores to roadside diners—along Maine's Route 1. Susan Abbattista shows you the way in "Creative Outlets," (page 22). Happy travels!

NEW IN TOWN

By George

Contrary to what you might assume from the patriotic-looking sign outside the former Rattlesnake, George: An American Tavern was not named after the first president. "We just figured it was a good, solid name for a restaurant," says chef Al Soto.

And that's the kind of cuisine you'll find at this reincarnation of the popular Boylston Street bar: "Simple and straightforward," says Soto, who had a devoted following at Uva and, more recently, at Beacon Hill Bistro. At George, he's serving up dishes that are decidedly American: pork roast with marinated apples and an oatmeal stout glaze; a clam roast with quahogs, steamers, littlenecks, smoked bacon, potatoes and corn bread; and beer-braised pot roast with spring vegetables, creamed potatoes and whipped horseradish. You can almost picture Washington himself riding up to the tavern, tying his horse to the hitching post, and stopping in for some ale. The space has been gutted and given a more upscale look with dark wood paneling, lots of booths and funky drop lights. Upstairs, you'll find Georgia, "a cool, loungey type place" that's more casual and relaxed, says Soto. "It's just the kind of place where we'd like to hang out." And don't worry—the roof deck is still the crowning jewel. 384 Boylston St., Boston (617-859-8555).

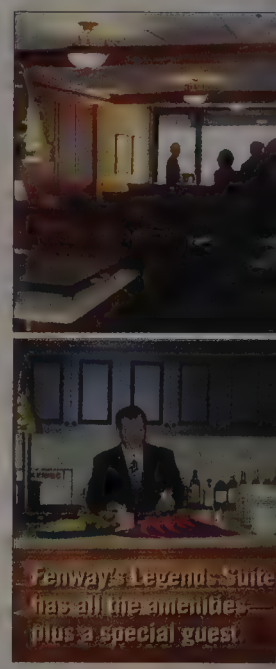
A Suite Deal



Fenway's Legend Suite has all the amenities—plus a special guest.

If you're tired of cramming into the bleachers at Red Sox games, talk your company or your rich uncle into doing it up right next time by booking the Legends Suite. For a cool $10,000, 20 lucky fans get to watch the game in style—and in fine company. The Legends Suite earns its moniker by giving visitors some quality time with a Red Sox legend during the game. So far, the roster includes the likes of Carl Yastrzemski, Fred Lynn, Dwight Evans, Rico Petrocelli and Joe Morgan. Your 10 grand also gets you four premium-level first-base seats, should anyone want a closer view of the game; a tour of Fenway Park with a group photo in front of the Green Monster and the chance to watch batting practice from the new Monster seats. ("So far, everyone's caught a ball," says premium seating sales manager Sean Curtin.) So has this opulent offering found any takers? At press time, the season is sold out except for June 29, July 20 and the last two home stands. —Ezra Dyer

CLUB SCENE

Spring Heats Up

•Local DJ collective Groovefire has spent much of the past year bringing its funky, sexy house sound to dance floors around the country. The trio is currently making a splash in the Thursday-night scene with a unique concept, Play Thursdays at 711 Boylston. The party kicks off at 6pm sharp, and stretches until 2am. On May 1, you can catch Groovefire's Todd Hanna, Phil Jakob and Mike Hoska with special guests Beat Khemistry, featuring Andrew Raynor and Buddharma. House music DJ Randy Deshaies makes a guest appearance May 8. There's no cover charge.

Martinis are the drink of choice at Whiskey Park's new Sunday-night event, Cherry, featuring Ricky Fatts behind the decks.

•Sundays at Whiskey Park are changing tunes with Cherry, a new weekly event featuring Ricky Fatts behind the decks. Club-goers can expect a well-dressed and sophisticated crowd as usual, with Fatts spinning rock classics, hip-hop, house and R&B. Be sure to look your best, or you may not get in.

•Starting May 1, Thursday nights at Matrix are going Latin. Club Candela, featuring DJ Michael Mercado, welcomes ladies ages 18 and older and gentlemen 21 and older to the Roxy complex. This "noche Latina" gets started at 10pm, and ladies are admitted free before 11pm. Proper dress required. —Daniel Spurling

AROUND TOWN

Bostonians Gone Wild

Take a group of bikini-clad coeds and muscle-bound hunks, get them drunk, roll the cameras, and you've got yourself a goldmine. Just ask MTV, which has been capitalizing on spring break hedonism for nearly two decades. It's a wonder it's taken so long for Mary-Ellis Bunim and Jonathan Murray, the production team behind such reality mainstays as MTV's The Real World, to make a feature-length, reality-based spring break movie (unaffiliated with MTV). The Real Cancun is set in the Mexican spring break mecca and premiered nationally April 25. It's based on a simple concept: throw 16 college-aged kids and lots of booze in a hotel and hope the results are rowdy. Four of the group were selected at a casting call in Boston: Amber, a safe sex–promoting Tufts sophomore; Brittany, a firecracker of a BU freshman; and Dave and Heidi, two clean-cut high school seniors from the South Shore. The local quartet is keeping tight-lipped about the specifics of their trip, but none seems embarrassed by any of his or her on-camera behavior. According to Brittany, "We were angels compared to some of the other cast members." The young exhibitionists were most talkative about the perks. Amber appreciates the complimentary Real Cancun thongs, "When you're in college, you sometimes run out of underwear and you have to, like, rinse it out in the sink and then take out the hair dryer. But it's all good." Good? We'll see.—Jessica Iredale

Going Postal... All it took was a few disgruntled employees and a Seinfeld episode or two to cement the post office's reputation as an anger-filled work environment. Last-minute tax filers might have done their part to contribute to the stress during the night of April 15. But luckily, Boston-based Dancing Deer Baking Co. sweetened the scene by distributing more than 800 cookies to taxpayers at the Fort Point post office from 10:30pm to midnight. Dancing Deer spokesperson Duane Lefevre recalls tax night at the post office as "a total zoo with four or five Boston cops directing traffic and postal workers in the street conducting a kind of drive-up system." Why did Dancing Deer leap into the fray? According to Lefevre, the company's philosophy is, "Cookies bring joy." www.dancingdeer.com.

Not Your Grandma's Game... Think you have to go to the VFW to play a little bingo? Think again. The retirees' favorite has emerged at the swanky Italian eatery Via Matta, of all places. A launch party on April 14 featured the IMPROPER's own Jonathan Soroff as caller, and the weekly games continue with local celebrity emcees Mondays from 9pm until midnight in the wine bar. Proceeds from the $3 bingo cards benefit the Italian Home for Children, and bingo seating is limited to 40. Winners take home prizes like Puma bags and $100 gift certificates to local restaurants.

On Top of Old Smokey... Why keep a good thing to yourself? Especially when there's free food and glory to be won. Maggiano's third annual Mom's Famous Meatball Contest lets meatball-makers submit their recipe—whether it's a family heirloom or an accidental success. Just fill out the application (available at Maggiano's) by May 3 and provide the details of your recipe. Then wait to see if you're one of five finalists invited to serve their meatballs to a panel of judges May 6.

Novel Tea... In true luxury hotel style, the folks at the Four Seasons' Bristol Lounge recently introduced Power Tea from 5-11pm daily. Ironically, you won't find Earl Grey or watercress sandwiches at this "tea." Power Tea is actually an assortment of tony hors d'oeuvres served on a wrought iron tea tray. Parties of two to four can munch on Osetra caviar, foie gras, steak tartar and tempura for $95. And to accompany this upscale snack, the Four Seasons suggests something a little more potent than lapsang souchong: a martini, for example, which can be had for an additional cost.

Boston Bakes for Breast Cancer May 5-11

Sweet Relief... Put your diet on hold this month and indulge in one (or many!) of the tasty confections created specifically for the fourth annual Boston Bakes for Breast Cancer event May 5-11. More than 60 local pastry chefs add a specialty dessert to their menu, and 100 percent of the proceeds benefit the Eva Brownman Breast Cancer Fund. SAM SAYS

Spring Cuts

I recently spoke with Vidal Sassoon's director of color and technical research, Annie Humphreys, and international creative director, Tim Hartley, about this season's hair trends.

Samantha House: What's the latest fashion in hair color?

Annie Humphreys: A splash or panel of color that runs across your hair is the newest thing. It sits under the other hair so it peeks out. It's a fun new look without having to commit to all-over color.

SH: What colors are the most popular?

AH: Vibrant reds and caramelized blondes.

SH: What are the hottest trends in haircuts?

Tim Hartley: Geometric cuts are hot, but it doesn't have to be extreme. Think '80s revival with a '60s influence.

SH: How do you feel about the bob, or blunt cuts in general?

TH: The bob is making a comeback, but I think it's very much for the individual. Dramatic lengths make it interesting.

SH: Would you recommend long or short hair this season?

TH: Shorter hair probably looks better with the current trends. Hair usually mimics hemlines, and mini skirts are so in style this year. If you have long hair, and you are scared to change, try a fringe bang to update it.

—Samantha House

IMPROPER REPORTS

Patio Dining

Every season brings with it a new crop of restaurants offering patio dining for the first time. Here's what's sprung up this season:

Bambara, 25 Edwin Land Blvd., Cambridge: View of the Museum of Science, the Lechmere Canal and the Charles River

The Black Sheep Cafe, 350 Main St., Cambridge: Naturally shaded and fenced in with lots of flowers and plants; view of a firehouse's 109-year-old brick hose-drying tower

Blu, 4 Avery St., Boston: Fourth-floor view of downtown tucked away from the hustle and bustle

Legal Sea Foods, One Bennett St., Cambridge: Eavesdrop on conversations between policy wonks from the Kennedy School of Government; secluded patio

Masa, 439 Tremont St., Boston: Upbeat music, Italian wooden furniture and "Megaritas"—64-ounce margaritas for two

Noir, Charles Hotel, One Bennett St., Cambridge: Cozy Harvard Square patio set below street level; live music in the summer

Pigalle, 75 Charles St., Boston: Urban, Parisian-style dining with white linens and fresh flowers

Rouge, 480 Columbus Ave., Boston: Mint juleps and a view of Union Church, the Belvedere and the Prudential

TK's Jazz Cafe, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston: Live jazz

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

The Ban is On... Cinco de Mayo means more than Coronas and guacamole this year. Beginning May 5, the city of Boston is officially smoke free, and the Public Health Commission will be on the beat. Its staff of enforcers will fine establishments $100 for the first offense, $500 for the second and $1,000 for every violation thereafter. The crackdown begins during business hours on the 5th (not at the stroke of midnight on May 4). JoAnn Landers, a spokesperson for the Public Health Commission, says, "We will enforce the law, but if we see establishments trying to enforce the ban, we'll use our discretion."

Luau on Lansdowne... Lansdowne Street's club scene is about to get a dose of the South Seas. Hot on the trail of its retro hangout Kings, the nightlife moguls at the Lyons Group are adding a Polynesian twist to their repertoire with the Tiki Room. The restaurant/bar is slated to open in late May in the space that formerly housed Jake Ivory's. Highlights include an expansive tropical drink list and a create-your-own pu pu platter menu. Grass skirts are optional.

Something Old, Something New...

Some people's home improvement projects land them in the hospital counting their remaining fingers, while other's land them in the limelight. The latter happened to This Old House's new host-in-training. Boston resident Kevin O'Connor (above) turned to the experts at Ask This Old House when he and his wife hit a snag in their home renovations. Next thing he knew, the crew showed up to tackle the problem and were so impressed with his charisma that he was screen-tested for the role of host. When the offer came in, O'Connor did what any red-blooded American would do: He left his job as a VP in Fleet's sports finance group and signed on the dotted line. Come fall, the banker-turned-handyman replaces Steve Thomas as host of This Old House and its sister production, Ask This Old House, on WGBH Boston.

All Aboard... When we received an e-mail promoting a bus service to and from New York City for just $10 each way, we did a double take. You can't even drive to the Big Apple for $10—with tolls, gas and pit stops—let alone be driven. After a little investigating, the deal proved legit. Lucky Star Bus launched its Boston-to-New York service on April 19, and for a limited time, one-way tickets are just $10. The 24- to 59-seat, gay-friendly shuttle, complete with television and bathroom, loads at Club Hollywood in Chinatown and delivers passengers to NYC via Maria's Bakery on Lafayette Street. Schedules are available at www.luckystarbus.com. (888-881-0887).

For Name's Sake... What's in a name? If it happens to be Isabella, it means a lifetime of free access to a world-class art collection. As of April 14, in celebration of its centennial year, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum is implementing an Isabellas Free Forever policy, which means anyone named Isabella gets free admission to the Gardner. Thinking of passing yourself off as an Isabella to save a couple of bucks? Think again. Museum attendants will be carefully checking IDs.

Mrs. Gardner in Venice, 1894, by Anders Zorn

Stell-aaah... Lexington is known as the home of the shot heard 'round the world. While you probably won't hear any shots fired nowadays, some shouting will be heard in the town's Depot Square May 3. In celebration of its production of A Streetcar Named Desire, the Lexington Players host a Stella Yelling Contest—based on a New Orleans tradition and Marlon Brando's famous onscreen bellow. Men and woman are invited to give their most passionate yell (women can yell "Stanley"). Three judges whittle down the competition based on raw emotion and volume. www.thelexingtonplayers.org.

Spring Cleaning

Let's stop the cleaning Cold War

I've written before about my need for some type of cleaning service in my apartment. That was when I was living with Scott and Dave, a.k.a. Neskey. Little did I know that things were relatively spotless under the Neskey regime, and that once he left, order, such as it was, would crumble. It's not that Neskey's replacement, Lance, is messy—quite the opposite—it's just that the overall roommate dynamic has changed for the messier.

Neskey used to provide the motivation to get things done. If we hadn't gone grocery shopping in a month and were subsisting on pickles and Snow's clam chowder, Neskey would rally us for a trip to Stop & Shop. If the apartment suffered some type of infrastructure problem, like when the dishwasher began washing the floor, Neskey would fix it. And when the general uncleanliness got out of hand, Neskey would reach his disgust threshold and break out the mop, thus guilting Scott and me into helping clean up the common areas. He even liked to cook. In retrospect, Neskey was our own Martha Stewart—a younger, male version who was liable to get drunk and go swimming in Boston Harbor in the middle of the winter, but decidedly Marthalike nonetheless.

When Neskey moved on to better himself and play with cadavers at Albany Medical College, he was replaced by Lance. I don't know if Lance attended military school, but his bedroom usually looks like it would pass inspection by even the most ill-tempered drill sergeant. Lance is so neat that he even has an electric air purifier for his room so that his air molecules will be neat. I could probably sublet Lance's room to Mass General to use for minor surgical procedures.

Unfortunately, Lance doesn't use his awesome powers for the general good of the apartment. I don't blame him, really—I wouldn't clean the bathroom, for instance, if I thought I'd be the only one to ever do it (in fact, that's exactly why I don't clean the bathroom). The mutual mistrust between Scott, Lance and me means that the kitchen, bathroom and living room are perpetually not-so-fresh, the victims of an intra-apartment Cold War of cleaning. Without Neskey's dictatorial personality in the mix, a stalemate has arisen.

I've tried to do my part. A few months ago my friend Kara hounded me into standing out on Charles Street with her to sign people up to get those blue recycling bins. Everyone thought we were trying to sell something, and the majority of people did what I do when I see somebody on the sidewalk with a clipboard: They either crossed the street or hurried by and avoided making eye contact. Kara would then yell after them extolling the virtues of free recycling bins while I stood there holding a recycling poster like Silent Bob. But I was able to procure a sorely needed recycling bin for our apartment. (Based on the size of the newspaper stack we had accumulated, the papers at the bottom were probably hand-written by monks.) Having witnessed firsthand the public's disdain for recycling bins, then, I was quite surprised when someone stole ours the second week I put it out.

In addition to our recycling difficulties, the aforementioned occasional infrastructure problems are now festering unattended. For example: One corner support for the top shelf of our kitchen cabinets is broken. For the past two weeks, that shelf has been supported by two plastic Harpoon glasses wedged on the shelf below to shore up the tipsy corner. This would be a permanent fix but for the fact that the middle shelf is now sagging precariously which makes sense since it is supporting its own load, and, via the Harpoon pillars, that of the top shelf. It's only a matter of time before a structural failure wipes out our entire supply of dishes, but still none of us has taken the initiative to fix the top shelf with a new screw. I did it last time this happened and I refuse to be the enabler.

LANCE IS SO NEAT THAT HE EVEN HAS AN ELECTRIC AIR PURIFIER FOR HIS ROOM SO THAT HIS AIR MOLECULES WILL BE NEAT.

It may be time to have a summit meeting between the roommates to work out an official cleaning/fix-it schedule. I'm worried about Lance, though. He seemed like a nice capitalist jock when he first moved in, but lately he's revealed a dark, hidden hippie side. He and Scott have been trading Phish bootlegs, and the other night I heard him in his room listening to a 25-minute guitar jam. They could form an Axis of Patchouli and the next thing you know I'm scrubbing the toilet while they're burning incense and doing easy stuff like vacuuming. On the positive side, maybe Lance will sign us up for another recycling bin. iB

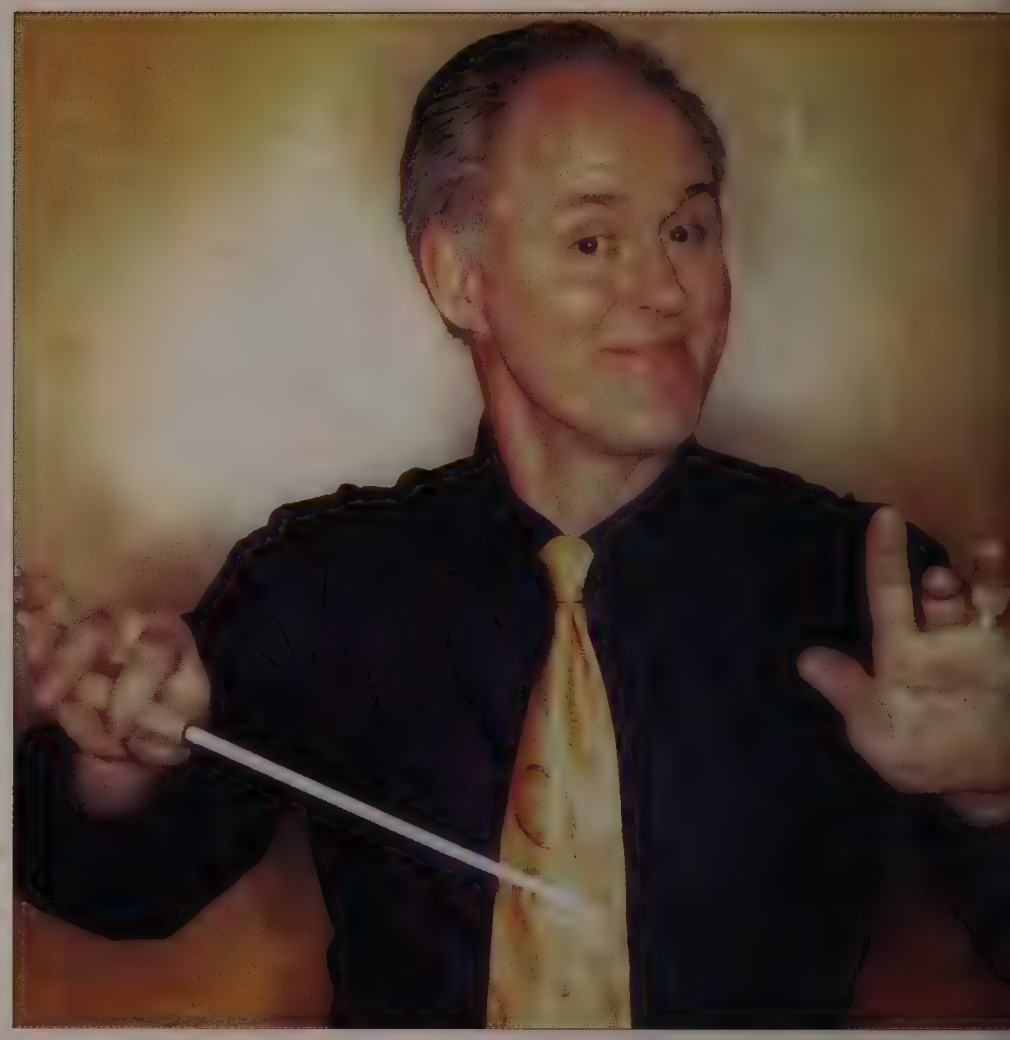
John Lithgow

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



Award-winning actor John Lithgow was born in Rochester, N.Y., and raised in Ohio, where his father produced Shakespeare festivals. After graduating from Harvard, Lithgow won a Fulbright scholarship and used it to study at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. He settled in New York to pursue a stage career and earned a Tony award for his Broadway debut in The Changing Room. Over the next 10 years, he appeared in a different Broadway play each season. His first major film role, for which he received an Oscar nomination, was in 1982's The World According to Garp. The next year, he earned a second Oscar nomination for Best Supporting Actor in Terms of Endearment. His other film credits include The Twilight Zone, A Civil Action, Raising Cain, Harry and the Hendersons and the animated hit Shrek. On TV, he's best known as the commander of a group of aliens on the sitcom 3rd Rock from the Sun, for which he won three Emmys and a Golden Globe. Last year, he received his second Tony award for Sweet Smell of Success. In recent years much of Lithgow's work has focused on children's entertainment. He has recorded two albums of kids' songs and written four children's books, including the bestseller The Remarkable Farkle McBride, on which he based "Farkle and Friends," a series of children's concerts. He'll be in Boston to participate in Harvard's Arts First festival, May 1–4, an event he founded 11 years ago to celebrate Harvard students and faculty in the arts. Later in the month, he'll narrate and perform in the New York City Ballet's The Carnival of the Animals, which he wrote the libretto for. Lithgow lives in Los Angeles with his wife, Mary, a UCLA history professor, and their two children, and he has a son from a previous marriage.

Jonathan Soroff: Actor, singer, dancer, director, author, theater and ballet impresario…Is there anything you can't do?

John Lithgow: Well, I'm not so great at opera. And I can't play anything short.

JS: False. You played Lord Farquaad in Shrek*! He was a shrimp.*

JL: True, but that was animated. I only had to speak it short.

JS: As 3rd Rock so definitively proved, aliens live among us, and French Stewart is clearly one of them. Name three other people in the public eye who you think are from another planet.

JL: George Bush.

JS: Senior or Dubya?

JL: Well, naturally it would be both. And, let's see, there's any number of other aliens out there. At one time, I would've said Dennis Rodman, but he's kind of slipped from public view. Then again, that's what aliens do, isn't it?

JS: Yup. Have you worn falsies since The World According to Garp*?*

JL: Oh, sure. I've probably been in drag more than any actor you could name. This spring, I'm performing in drag with the New York City Ballet, playing Mabel Bunson, the school nurse.

"DOGGEDNESS IS MY STRONG SUIT. I HURL MYSELF INTO ABSOLUTELY EVERYTHING. IT'S AMAZING I'VE SURVIVED THIS LONG."

JS: So do you think you make a fine-lookin' woman?

JL: No. That's the whole point. I'm a horrendous-looking woman. It's the ultimate sight gag.

JS: Least comfortable item of women's attire?

JL: Well, it's what a man has to do in order to dress as a woman. You have to cinch in your waist and wear padding on your hips. In Garp, I had so many foundation garments and lace-up corsets underneath my costume that I wasn't allowed to drink fluids until midday, because it took so long for me to pee.

JS: Rate your dancing ability on a scale of one to 10.

JL: Can I use negative numbers? [Laughs.] I've taken on ballet, which is particularly difficult, but I've been taking classes every morning for about two months now, so I'm terrible, but slightly less terrible than when I started. When I finally rehearse in New York, I think they'll be pleasantly surprised.

JS: Any strange skills on your resume, like the ability to carve scrimshaw, or fluency in Esperanto?

JL: I can do lots of things, but none of them very well. As an actor, you flit from one curious thing to another, acquiring different skills for different roles, but you only sort of half learn any of them.

JS: So, for example, when you appeared on horseback in Don Quixote*, you weren't as accomplished as you looked?*

JL: The horse literally ran away with me, not once, but twice. I was in a sheer white-knuckle panic, and everybody thought I was just showing off. It sort of begs the question, "Why did you get back on the second time?" But doggedness is my strong suit. I hurl myself into absolutely everything. It's amazing I've survived this long.

JS: What other near-death experiences have you had while acting?

JL: I did a cable movie in Kenya with Isabella Rossellini about ivory poaching. I was supposed to heroically save the elephants, so I ran forward, shrieking and yelling and gesticulating, and then I hear the producer saying, "John, John, get back here!" The elephants were threatening to charge, but I thought they were bluffing, and somebody had told me, "Just stare them down," so that's what I did. Apparently, I'm lucky I didn't get killed.

JS: Was working with Robin Williams as disconcerting as watching him?

JL: Well, he was wonderful to work with, but if a crowd gathered, he suddenly had an audience, and he magically became the dazzling Robin Williams, which did get a little exhausting.

JS: Greatest actor you've ever worked with?

JL: Oh, there are so many. And there's a very short list of people I didn't enjoy working with.

JS: Like?

JL: I think we'll skip that. Diana Rigg once asked me, "Darling, who's on your wild horses list?" I said, "What do you mean?" She said, "The people wild horses couldn't drag you to work with again."

JS: Was Shrek the easiest payday ever?

JL: Well, it was amazing. I went to a sound studio three or four times for a few hours each time over the course of three or four years, so it didn't really feel much like acting. You just do the same lines over and over again.

JS: Two Oscar nominations but no statuette. Ever feel like "always a bridesmaid, never a bride"?

JL: Not really. I haven't really done Oscar-worthy work in films for a long time. I know great roles will come along again, but all the best movies I was in were between 1982 and 1986. That was a long time ago. I haven't really done anything great since then.

JS: You made your stage debut at age 6 in Henry VI*…*

JL: It wasn't really my debut…

JS: Do you remember your lines?

JL: I didn't have any. I was the dead boy in the battle scene. My actual debut was as one of Nora's children in Ibsen's A Doll's House. I was 2½. I'm told I was very good.

JS: It seems like every celebrity alive is writing a children's book. Name one celebrity-written kids' book you'd never want to see.

JL: [Laughing.] Dr. Kevorkian's Bedtime Stories.

JS: You've recorded several children's albums. Favorite animal sound in "Old MacDonald"?

JL: Probably the horse. I do this stunning horse whinny.

JS: Aren't most kids' performers just cloying?

JL: I'm astounded at how many misread children and don't know how to entertain them. They don't put themselves into a kid's mindset. I pride myself on doing it right and I can't stand when people do it wrong.

JS: Do your own children ever tell you you're embarrassing them?

JL: Oh, yes, but not in so many words. They just pretend they don't know me. iB

R&R

Your summer calendar is starting to book up—an out-of-town wedding or two, a weeklong trip to the beach with friends, the annual family get-together. But at some point while the weather is kind, you'll want to sneak in a weekend escape to a spot where the pace is slower, the traffic is lighter and the air a whole lot sweeter. Lucky for you, you live in New England, where pretty vacation spots are plentiful and relatively near at hand. The question is: Where to go? We've scoured the New England countryside for unique destinations along four themes—restorative, ritzy, rustic and romantic—and even created itineraries that you can easily duplicate. All you have to do is book a room and get in your car.

RESTORATIVE: The Berkshires BY EZRA DYER

As a weekend destination to recharge your mental and physical batteries, the Berkshires makes a lot of sense. It's only two hours from Boston, and if you leave a little early, I-90 is generally less traffic-clogged (and thus less frustrating) than the major north-south routes. The Berkshires region is also home to more spas than you can shake an exfoliating mud mask at, and the combination of peaceful countryside, good restaurants and a massage or two ought to lower the pulse of even the most stressed-out Type A.

Before we begin, it bears mentioning that if you want an all-inclusive restorative trip to the Berkshires, Canyon Ranch in Lenox is an obvious choice. The renowned spa offers a slew of services (including outdoor massages in the summer), healthy food, guided hikes—you could build your own weekend itinerary without leaving the grounds. Unfortunately, however, Canyon Ranch's activities cannot be sampled a la carte. That's where our Berkshires itinerary comes in, with the Gateways Inn in Lenox as home base.

FRIDAY

Leave Boston in the early afternoon. Check in at the Gateways Inn on the main drag in Lenox, about 130 miles from Boston. The 11-room bed-and-breakfast occupies a mansion built in 1912 by Harley Proctor of Proctor & Gamble and is now owned by innkeepers Fabrizio and Rosemary Chiariello. Fabrizio hails from Naples, Italy, and the Gateways combines Proctor's New England old-money elegance with Fabrizio's European flair—he's responsible for the inn's impressive collection of Italian gouache paintings, which date from the late 1700s and adorn the hallways and the dining room.

Once you've stashed your stuff, hop in your car for a half-hour drive to the Old Inn on the Green in New Marlborough for dinner. Recently named one of Food and Wine's top 50 hotel restaurants in the country, the Old Inn on the Green's dining rooms are entirely candlelit. (Go tonight if you prefer an a la carte menu; on Saturdays the only option is a $62 prix-fixe menu. The weekday a la carte menu is also less pricey.)

After dining, return to the Gateways and relax at the bar, La Terrazza, with one of Fabrizio's 78 varieties of single-malt Scotch. If you'd like to try a few new liquors without ending up broke and drunk, the Gateways also offers flights of grappa and single-malt starting at $16.

SATURDAY

Eat breakfast at the Gateways, then drive to Cranwell Resort, Spa and Golf Club, five minutes away. Cranwell's golf course plays in front of the resort's main mansion. (You can reserve a tee time up to five days in advance.) Cranwell also offers a Golf Digest golf school—hey, learning a few tricks to avoid losing all your balls in the woods can't hurt your stress level.

Afterward, you can mosey over to the 35,000–square foot spa, which opened last year, for a postgame deep-tissue massage. The spa includes a pool, steam rooms, saunas and whirlpools, and offers more than 30 services ranging from the "Seaweed Experience" body wrap to the "Wildflower Gommage" exfoliation treatment. If you and your significant other can't be apart for even an hour, Cranwell offers the "duet" massage in a special room with side-by-side tables.

At night, head back to the Gateways for dinner in the dining room. Most tables are near the room's large windows, which reach almost to the floor and look out over the lawn. The menu includes items like salad of pear and Berkshire blue cheese and roasted cod with cockles, and the Gateways' wine list has won Wine Spectator's Award of Excellence.

After dinner, drive down Clifton Street, home to grand mansions from the era when monopoly was a business practice, not a board game. Clifton Street ends at Tanglewood, where you can listen to a classical music performance as the stars come out. Or you can head back to the inn and go to bed. Sleep has been proven to be very relaxing.

SUNDAY

Before you head home, you have time to take a leisurely hike up Monument Mountain, off Route 7 between Stockbridge and Great Barrington. Pick up sandwiches at one of Lenox' lunch shops and eat them at the summit, where Herman Melville, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Oliver Wendell Holmes gathered in 1850. When you're done, you should still make it back to Boston in time to get a relaxing, restorative, rejuvenating parking spot.

Guests at the Provencal-style Home Hill Inn can enjoy afternoon tea in the sitting room or a dip in the pool

RITZY: Plainfield, N.H. BY ERIN HAGEDORN

Plainfield, N.H., a picturesque rural town complete with a covered wooden bridge, might be the last place you'd expect to find a posh French hotel. But Plainfield's French-inspired Home Hill Inn, which combines joie de vivre with simple New England charm, is just the place to enjoy a weekend of pure indulgence.

FRIDAY

You're embarking on a hedonist-for-a-weekend getaway, so why not stop and smell the roses on the two-hour drive to Plainfield? Concord, N.H., is about halfway, and we recommend that you exit off I-93 there to splurge for dinner at Brianas' Bistro, a cozy, candlelit restaurant just across from the state capitol. It serves up exquisite entrées like Atlantic swordfish with duck prosciutto. Whatever you do, don't pass up the crème brûlée.

After just over an hour's drive from Concord on I-89, you'll arrive at Home Hill Inn. The staff—all of whom have impeccable posture and even better diction—will most likely greet you by name. And if they're not too busy in the dining room, you'll meet one of the proprietors, Stephane and Victoria du Roure. Victoria (who trained in France) also serves as executive chef of the inn's AAA Four-Diamond restaurant.

Home Hill Inn recently became a member of the prestigious international Relais & Châteaux association, and the touches of elegance in its guest rooms make you feel truly pampered. You'll find L'Occitane bath products, fluffy bathrobes, plush down comforters, slippers, gourmet chocolates, bottled water and a plate of fruit, plus a printout of the local weather report. Of the 12 rooms, the most extravagant is the two-room Parrish Suite, named after the artist Maxfield Parrish, who lived in Plainfield. It includes a sitting room with a writing desk, oriental rugs and heaps of 18th-century French antiques.

SATURDAY

Saturday morning at Home Hill will remind you that you're here to indulge. The country continental breakfast (included in the price of your room) features hot, homemade pastries along with other tasty offerings like fresh fruit, yogurt and quiche. If you're feeling compelled to work off the calories afterward, you can try out the clay tennis court, swim in the small pool or borrow a bike from the inn to ride the nearby trails.

But if you're dedicated to an all-out splurge of a weekend, you'll need to shop, and nearby Hanover, home to Dartmouth College, is just the place. Hanover's Main Street is loaded with distinctive shops, including a Simon Pearce store. For a dose of culture, you can also visit the college's renowned Hood Museum of Art. On the way back to Plainfield on Route 12A, stop at West Lebanon's Anichini Outlet Store, which sells the famous brand's luxury linens at a discount. Mind you, a duvet cover still pushes $1,000.

You'll want to make it back to the inn in time for afternoon tea, which is served in the plush sitting room. Settle into a comfortable chair to snack on homemade cookies and biscotti served with a variety of tea. If you linger long enough, you can enjoy predinner gourmet treats as well, served to you at your chair. But be sure to dress up before heading to the dining room, where you sit at tables set with the European silverware and crystal. (No jeans or sneakers after 6pm.) The seasonal menu is a bon vivant's dream. The gourmet tasting menu (with dishes like braised osso bucco with baby fennel) and a la carte menu are inspired by the flavors of Provence, and many ingredients are flown in daily from France. After dinner, stuffed and happy, you can choose from a wine and cigar menu while relaxing outside on the petanque court. (Petanque is a traditional game similar to bocci.)

SUNDAY

On Sunday, drive down the road to Cornish, where a group of artists who gathered at the turn of the last century to escape city life founded the Cornish Art Colony. The Cornish Colony Gallery and Museum features numerous works by Maxfield Parrish. Also worth a visit in Cornish is the Saint-Gaudens National Historic Site, the former home and museum of 19th-century sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens. The grounds, now a national park, offer sweeping views of the Upper Connecticut River, making it an ideal picnic spot. (Home Hill Inn prepares gourmet picnics for guests—arrange one in advance.) In July and August, the Saint-Gaudens site holds a weekly Sunday outdoor concert series.

On the way home, keep the indulgent theme going with a quick side trip off Route 12A to L.A. Burdick Chocolate in Walpole, N.H. The dark chocolates are imported from France, Switzerland and Venezuela and are well worth the side trip.

Home Hill Inn, 703 River Road, Plainfield (603-675-6165). www.homehillinn.com. $175-$325 a night (no children under 14); dinner for two about $140.

RUSTIC: Millinocket, Maine BY EZRA DYER

Sure, you don't have to drive five and a half hours to feel like you're in the boonies, but for a real rustic weekend nothing beats good old Maine. And sorry, Ogunquit doesn't count. Millinocket offers whitewater rafting, hiking and Baxter State Park. Don't bother charging up your cell phone; it won't work where you're going.

FRIDAY

It's roughly 300 miles from Boston to Millinocket, about eight miles off I-95. Taking a half-day off on Friday ensures that you'll be well into Maine by the time traffic hits. Rush hour north of Bangor isn't much of a problem.

Once you hit Millinocket, dinner's your first priority so head straight to River Drivers restaurant. Set on the Penobscot River deep in the woods outside of town, River Drivers seems an unlikely place to find a top-shelf meal, but chef Herman Ammerman's creations—haddock stuffed with lobster and crabmeat and topped with lobster Newburg, for example—would hold their own at any high-end city restaurant. The prices, however, are quite rustic.

After dinner, drive to New England Outdoor Center's Twin Pine Camps, about 20 minutes away. The cabins at this sprawling facility on Millinocket Lake range from small, modest and decidedly old-school, with walls made of hewn logs and an open floor plan—hope everyone knows each other—to a brand-new, two-story house. But if you're really going for the Maine cabin experience, you'll pick one of the older places. There you'll find a gas fireplace, coffeemaker, a couch, a large dinner table and a gas grill and fire pit outside. You'll also find mismatched silverware and an assortment of pots and pans from the time before Teflon. Deal with it.

Once you're settled, start a fire, kick back and enjoy a beverage next to the lake. If you want to relax with a beer at night, be sure to stop at the Irving gas station on the way back to the cabins to stock up. (They have wine too, but there's a reason sommeliers don't frequent Irving stations.)

SATURDAY

There are two main options for your day.

Option 1: New England Outdoor Center. Stick around the camp to join one of NEOC's many wilderness-related activities, which range from wild to quiet and contemplative. Adventurous types can go whitewater rafting on the the Penobscot River, with its Class 5 rapids, or take kayak lessons. More laid-back folk might opt for a moose tour, which departs early in the morning and at dusk, when moose come out to frolic in the verdant woodlands. The moose tour is similar to a whale-watching trip in that if you see the animal you've come to spot, great, but if not, you've still had a day outdoors. So do people often get to see the elusive beasts? "I don't know yet," says NEOC's Gene Fourney. "This is the first year we've offered it."

Option 2: Baxter State Park. Millinocket is right next to one of the country's more unique state parks. Between 1939 and 1962 Percival P. Baxter, former governor of Maine, donated 200,000 acres of land and established a trust fund that pays for the park's operation. (There is a $10 entrance fee per vehicle.) Baxter takes no tax money, and as such it doesn't cater to the RV-driving public—its primary goal is to preserve the wilderness. There are strict limits on parking and trail capacity, so to hike mile-high Mount Katahdin, the park's star attraction, you need to arrive early. If you're in good shape, you can hike Katahdin in a single day, but overnight camping is allowed, provided you've made reservations for a campsite.

When you return to your cabin, you can cook hot dogs on the grill and make s'mores over your fire just like the pioneer settlers did hundreds of years ago. Then go sit by the lake and play your banjo. Or, if you are missing that gritty urban culture, head 20 minutes down Route 157 to Club LaCasa, the Millinocket area's finest exotic-dancing establishment, and watch ladies get rustic, just like the pioneer settlers did hundreds of years ago.

SUNDAY

Check out and begin your drive back to Boston. Two and a half hours south of Millinocket, stop at Big G's on Benton Avenue in Winslow for sandwiches. It's about five minutes off the highway. Trust us on this. One Big G's sandwich will feed your whole family. Or order one for yourself and savor the second half once you're back in the land of gridlock and mega-malls.

25 KINGSTON STREET BOSTON

ROMANTIC: Newfane, Vt.

BY ERIN HAGEDORN

It happens to every couple: You and your sweetheart get so caught up juggling jobs, friends, social schedules and appointments that romantic time together falls by the wayside. You're in dire need of some quality (ahem) one-on-one time. An amatory weekend for two is just what the doctor ordered: a trip to a picture-perfect small town where you can hole up in a cozy country inn and leisurely explore the surroundings. Throw in a stroll through gardens, a Jacuzzi soak and a smooch under a covered bridge and you've got the makings of an idyllic romantic weekend. Which brings us to the Four Columns Inn in Newfane, Vt.

FRIDAY

Shortly before you reach Newfane (a pleasant two-and-a-half hour drive from Boston), you'll pass through Brattleboro, a town off I-91 at the junction of the Connecticut River and the West River. If you left Boston early enough, you have time to explore the town's many shops (including at least five bookstores). Afterward, have a relaxing dinner at The Marina, a restaurant with an outdoor deck that overlooks the two rivers. Here, you can sip piña coladas and feast on entrées like Cajun chicken or shrimp scampi.

When you get to Newfane, you'll discover an intimate 160-year-old country inn across from a picturesque town green. Four Columns' rooms set the stage for romance—there are no televisions to distract you, and the luxury suites include an extraordinary spa bathroom, a giant bed and a Jacuzzi for two. Before holing up in your room, though, you'll want to stroll through the inn's gardens, around the pool, and around the deck that stretches behind the inn, where you can cross a charming rustic bridge over a stream. (The bridge leads to 150 acres of hiking trails that you might want to check out during the weekend.)

SATURDAY

Head to the inn's elegant but cozy dining room for breakfast. Don't fill up on the French toast and scrambled eggs—you'll want to save room for the homemade pastries. Then it's time to hit the road. Adventurous couples take note: Several small, secluded nude beaches are located along Rock River, within a few miles of the inn. (There are also some public swimming spots.)

Although a walk through one of the many small towns close to Newfane (like the quintessential Vermont villages of Grafton and Putney) makes for a romantic stroll, we recommend an agricultural adventure at Adams Farm in Wilmington, about 18 miles away. This working farm, run by husband and wife Jill and Carl Mancivalano, features rolling green pastures and animals galore. But the real attraction is the afternoon tea, served outside in an open-sided shelter, away from but in view of the animals. It's a full-blown high tea—three courses of farm-made specialties like Vermont cheese, finger sandwiches, scones with maple butter, and fudge made by Jill's mother—all served on real china with fresh flowers on the table. To keep you entertained, Carl gives Scottish-style sheepherding demos while you sit and sip, and Jill hands out vintage hats from her vast collection for everyone to wear.

After tea, take an evening hayride through Adams Farm's 200-plus acres and then cuddle up at the bonfire party, where you can toast marshmallows on a pitchfork. (You can also bring your own wine.) You'll have all the more reason to snuggle when the ghost stories begin. Before you leave, pick up a jar of locally made Tom & Sally's Chocolate Body Paint (it ain't for your car, honey) from the gift shop.

Back in Newfane, have a late dinner at Four Columns' AAA Four-Diamond restaurant where you can feast on Asian and French fusion cuisine prepared by Greg Parks, who has been cooking gourmet dishes at the inn for more than 25 years.

SUNDAY

Check out time is 11am. But if you're not ready to head home just yet, drive to the nearby town of Jamaica. On the way, pause for a walk through one of the area's dozens of covered bridges (see www.vermont.com for a list) and steal a smooch. (It's good luck!) Hamilton Falls, one of southern Vermont's most spectacular waterfalls, is located at the edge of Jamaica's Green Mountain National Forest. There's also the Butterfly Heaven at D&K's Garden Center in Jamaica, where you can walk through the quaintly landscaped, butterfly-filled pavilion. When you're ready to say goodbye to the butterflies, it's time to flutter back to Boston.

creative OUTLETS

Kittery and Freeport offer a shopper's smorgasbord, but don't forget to leave room for surprises

BY SUSAN ABBATTISTA PHOTOGRAPHS BY BOB PERACHIO

The last time I went outlet shopping in Maine, I came home with two pairs of Gap shorts, four Maidenform bras, a windbreaker from L.L. Bean, a moose-shaped candy bar from Cool as a Moose, two pairs of winter boots from Nine West and a sander from Black & Decker. I don't know how to use a sander—hell, I don't even own a house—but I just had to have it.

For Bostonians like me, the seasonal pilgrimage to Kittery and Freeport is something akin to experiencing nirvana at an all-you-can-eat buffet. "Look at those sandals! Cute top! Mmmm, vanilla candles! New sheets!" But as you drive back to Boston with your trunk full of goodies, the hangover from your highball of American consumerism sets in: "I just drove to Maine (a.k.a. Vacationland) and spent the entire time looking at the back of a cash register." That's probably not the intended spirit behind the state's motto, "Maine: The way life should be."

The next time you travel north for bargains, be sure to set aside some time for exploration. With some forethought, it's easy to set up the perfect little trip, one that combines a giddy shopping experience with the pleasant surprises of a minivacation. This itinerary is a just sample of what's possible; it's based on an easy weekend drive that I did with a travel companion, a reformed outlet shopper who once bought three pairs of identical brown shoes at Bass. The trip lasts two days and spans an approximate 125-mile stretch of Maine that begins in Kittery, makes its way through Freeport and ends in the midcoast town of Rockland.

To leave ample time for shopping and exploring coastal towns, we chose not to stray far from Route 1. When you travel up the coast this way, you get a dramatic view of the effects of commercial development on small-town communities. After you leave Freeport and pass through Woolwich, Newcastle and Damariscotta, notice how congested clusters of businesses give way to farms dotted on sprawling acres. Along the way, keep your eyes open for small shops, flea markets, diners and roadside family businesses. As a general rule, you can take Route 1A extensions whenever you want a more scenic byway. (For additional itinerary suggestions, see sidebar on page 24.)

Before heading up to Kittery and Freeport, though, you should come up with an itinerary. What do you really need? What stores do you want to visit? Two Web sites provide basic directions from Boston, as well as maps of store locations: thekitteryoutlets.com and freeportusa.com. These can help you solidify a game plan. Keep in mind that there is some overlap between the two shopping meccas located roughly 60 miles apart. For example, you'll find big names like Banana Republic, Bass, Coach, Cole Haan, the Gap, J. Crew, Nine West, Reebok and Samsonite in both places. L.L. Bean and its factory store, meanwhile, are only in Freeport.

Once you hit the southern-Maine town of Kittery on Route 1, be sure to stop at the Kittery Trading Post (look for the large bull's eye right after the Liz Claiborne outlet). The parking lot alone will make you feel as if you've traveled to someplace in middle America where folks drive pickups and eat lots of charred meat. Just don't be put off by bumper stickers like "Keep Honking, I'm Reloading." Large wood carvings of Native Americans wearing traditional hunting garb (including a man peeking out from inside a bear's head) flank the store's outer doors. Inside, KTP sells everything for enjoying (or conquering) the great outdoors. You'll also find stuffed beasts—owls, ducks, coyotes, moose and caribou. On the store's lowest level, watch hunters test equipment and lock their gaze on imaginary prey. Bambi lovers can focus their attention on the maple candy.

About five miles down the road from Kittery, in York, the Stonewall Kitchen makes for another fun stop. Like a cross between Williams-Sonoma and grandma's country kitchen, this specialty foods store is filled with things you'd expect to see at a country bed-and-breakfast—syrups, pancake mix, cookware and nostalgic kitchen items. From 9 to 5 during the week, stop in at the viewing gallery and watch jams and jellies being made. The real treat, though, is tasting the delicacies that the store stocks, from peach-Amaretto jam to Bourbon-molasses mustard. You can even try farmhouse waffles made while you wait.

The next stop is the DeLorme Map Store in Yarmouth, about 53 miles north of York. (Stay on Route 1 or, to save time, take the faster I-95 and then cut back over to Route 1 in Yarmouth.) As you approach, you can see Eartha, the world's largest rotating globe, looming inside a glass atrium. With a circumference of 130 feet, Eartha is remarkably detailed—its surface image of Earth was created using satellite photography. You can view this breathtaking sight from three different levels inside the building. The Map Store is also a great place to pick up maps (of course), travel guides, inflatable globes, globe marbles and globe chocolates.

From Yarmouth, it's a mere five miles to Freeport, home of the flagship L.L. Bean store, which is open 24 hours a day. In your zeal to pick up thermal underwear at 3 in the morning, you may not notice the large tower clock just beyond the L.L. Bean lobby, to the right of Discovery Pond. This clock, with a two-meter pendulum, was built for the town of Freeport by the Balzer family, local residents known nationwide for their skillful clock restorations. On the hour, the clock plays a song from a hollow steel cylinder that works like an oversize music box.

The novelty of being able to shop well past bedtime may entice you, as it did us, to spend the night in Freeport. Inns, B&Bs and motels are plentiful, and we chose the Harraseeket, two blocks north of L.L. Bean. The historic inn (circa 1798, with modern additions built in matching style) sits on five acres of lush grounds. We especially enjoyed afternoon tea in the mahogany drawing room and the tableside preparation of Caesar salad in the formal dining room. Service and amenities here are top-notch, but the staff and proprietors are down-to-earth.

The next morning, continue northeast on Route 1, about 30 miles, until you reach Wiscasset, which bills itself as "the prettiest village in Maine." The town center, with its many antique shops, is a wonderful place to putter around on a summer day. Stop in at Red's Eats, a Route 1 landmark that for 60 years has drawn vacationers who come to try the famous lobster rolls.

Lush green landscapes provide a soothing backdrop as you continue northward for about 25 miles to the town of Thomaston. On the main drag, you'll find an amazing selection of woodwork (cutting boards, bureaus, coffee tables and birdhouses) at the Maine State Prison Showroom. The prices are reasonable, and all goods are finely crafted and inconspicuously stamped with the phrase "Made by Inmate." There's something eerie about buying an item made by someone who obviously has a lot of time on his hands, but look on the bright side: Proceeds support the prison's job-skills program. Afterward, enjoy a tall glass of fresh-squeezed lemonade and a slice of homemade pie at the Thomaston Café, a homey spot that has received praise from Gourmet and the New York Times for its "Yankee cuisine," especially its fishcakes and chowders.

Less than five miles from Thomaston, enjoy the view of Rockland, a large commercial fishing port on Penobscot Bay. Many travelers come here to visit the Farnsworth Art Museum, which has an expansive collection of 18th- and 19th-century American art. Rockland is also home to the Maine Lobster Festival, which takes place this year from July 30 to August 3. iB

10 MORE WAYS TO SPICE UP YOUR TRIP

Here are other Maine activities easily accessible from your drive up Route 1, listed from south to north.

1. Walk along the Long Sands or Short Sands beaches of York, which are open to the public.
2. Gaze at the postcard-perfect Nubble Light, a lighthouse overlooking the mouth of York Harbor.
3. View the rocky coast and the 100-foot Bald Head Cliff in Ogunquit.
4. Hike the seven-mile trail through Wells National Reserve and see its diverse habitats: woodlands, fields, wetlands, beach and dunes.
5. Indulge in some fried dough and ride the Ferris wheel at the Coney Island–like amusement park at Old Orchard Beach.
6. Spend an afternoon visiting shops, bookstores, restaurants and pubs along the cobblestone streets of Portland's Old Port Exchange.
7. Have a picnic or barbecue at Wolf's Neck Woods State Park in Freeport.
8. Observe ospreys, blue herons and wild shorebirds at the Hamilton Sanctuary in West Bath.
9. Tour the outdoor shipyard at the Maine Maritime Museum in Bath.
10. See an air show (call for times) at the Owls Head Transportation Museum, two miles south of Rockland.

DRIVEN TO DINE

You don't have to travel far to find culinary and sensory enchantment

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX PHOTOGRAPHS BY BOB PERACHIO

Fill your wallet and your gas tank and hit the road! Summer is the best time to explore spectacular dining destinations farther afield. And because you probably won't want to drive an hour or more after enjoying a six-course dinner with wine, it's also a perfect opportunity to plan a mini-vacation that lasts at least until breakfast. Be sure to take the time to plan a getaway that best fits your personal definition of ultimate luxury, whether that means a restaurant with official world-class standing—as a member of the highly exclusive Relais & Châteaux association, for example—or one that simply strikes you as the most romantic spot imaginable. Here's a quality quartet of suggestions, three of which offer on-site, luxury lodging.

WHEATLEIGH

Hawthorne Road, Lenox, Mass.
(413) 637-0610

Many fine restaurants and inns pursue perfection, but Wheatleigh is one of the few to actually capture it. On the outside, it's a faux Florentine palazzo built in the late 19th century, in a grandly landscaped setting. On the inside, it's a breathtaking blend of recently restored architectural detail—elaborate mantels and huge Tiffany windows—and modern makeover by New York architects Calvin Tsao and Zack McKown expressed in neutral tones, streamlined minimalism and naturally luxurious materials from raw silk to dark wood. The utter tranquility of the surroundings will absorb any residual stress you may feel after the two-hour drive from Boston.

Once you walk through the Tiffany entryway and into the Great Hall, you'll be quietly and richly pampered by an amazingly solicitous staff. Gathered from Scotland, Austria, Switzerland and elsewhere by general manager Francois Thomas, they follow his lead in being prepared to handle any guest's whim or challenging situation with grace and efficiency.

If you've checked in for the night, everything you need to indulge yourself will be found in your room or suite: a welcoming tray of luscious Muscat grapes and walnuts, a plate piled high with cookies and sweets, a TV, a CD player and CDs, and a bathroom with a fabulous soaking tub and carefully arrayed Bulgari shampoos and lotions.

However, the restaurant beckons you to dine in the glass-enclosed portico that frames panoramic views of mountains and sky. Executive chef J. Bryce Whittlesey, who long ago worked at Boston's L'Espalier under chef/owner Frank McClelland before studying intensively in France, creates a remarkable "Grand Menu Degustation" showcasing fish and seafood, including rouget barbet (red mullet) that's been sent by FedEx from Madagascar.

Now, this "mullet by mail" is not a gratuitous gesture to prove the lengths to which the chef will go to use exotic ingredients. In fact, it's hard to imagine eating anything more delicious than the crispy-skinned rouget, served in a spring-garlic broth tinged with saffron and topped with delicate wild asparagus from California. It's followed by a creamy-fleshed, thick fillet of wild Columbia River sturgeon, accented by assertively herbal stinging nettles and applewood-smoked bacon, and accompanied, as is each course, by a thrillingly complementary wine selected by sommelier Pascal Fiancette.

By the time you get to dessert—a Meyer lemon soufflé into which dining room manager Eric Doerr plunges a spoonful of lemon-thyme sorbet—it's easy to doubt the existence of a world outside Wheatleigh.

The Wheatleigh gestalt is so exquisitely refined, so correct and so, well, perfect, as to be almost unsettling. Nerve-wracking enough, in fact, to provoke a retroactive fault-finding mission. Conclusion: Maybe, just maybe, the spoonful of fennel gelee that accompanied dinner's second course—a trio of finely chopped, tiny lemony mounds of periwinkle, razor clam and geoduck atop a little rectangle of toasted brioche—could have been more thoroughly chilled. Yeah, right.

THE WHITE BARN INN

37 Beach Avenue, Kennebunkport, Maine
(207) 967-2321

Because the White Barn Inn is a Relais & Châteaux property, you will be greeted with sincere warmth, pampered with exquisite politeness and provided with ultracivilized creature comforts. Once you've checked into your gorgeously decorated room, suite or cottage, you'll find it difficult to tear yourself away from the Jacuzzi, the soft terry-lined silk bathrobe, the seductive four-poster bed and the fireplace and move on to dinner in the antique-filled candlelit dining room.

Because the White Barn Inn is in Maine, and caters year-round to a local clientele, you will find white zinfandel on the wine list, salt-and-pepper shakers on the tables and lobster spring rolls as a signature appetizer. Hot, crisp, packed with tasty lobster and served with a spicy-sweet Thai-style sauce, it's a crowd pleaser, not a palate challenger. In fact, if you're in a "mixed" relationship (foodie and non), you will both find happiness here. Lobster diehards can continue dinner with a steamed lobster on homemade fettuccine with carrot, ginger, snow peas and cognac coral butter sauce. For carnivores, there's shiitake mushroom-and-wasabi-crusted grilled beef tenderloin on a sesame pancake with pinot noir sauce. There's always at least one vegetarian appetizer, second course and main course, such as the portobello mushroom lasagna. And the chef's seasonal tasting menu offers the likes of New England venison blanketed by a celeriac charlotte on a bed of Savoy cabbage, with an elegant and lively Madeira sauce.

Speaking of the chef, executive chef Jonathan Cartwright—whose work has earned the White Barn Inn Relais & Châteaux's prestigious Relais Gourmand status the past two years—runs the kitchen so well that you probably won't notice whether he's present or not. On this particular night of luxury, chef Sebastian Pfeiffer was a worthy stunt double, preparing an impromptu version of a main-course pot-au-feu (a French boiled dinner of meat and vegetables) in a sampler size. Instead of the grilled Maine pheasant breast listed on the menu, he prepared a tiny quail nestled against a slice of Quebec foie gras and a ravioli stuffed with butternut squash and Parma ham, all swimming in a rich broth brightened with red peppers.

The sommelier was also apparently elsewhere on our Tuesday night visit. But he was ably replaced by a waitress named Michelle, whose experience at Ogunquit's Arrows and the French Laundry in California's Napa Valley shone through in her ease and professionalism. Riesling with the lobster and Sauterne with foie gras were expected pairings, but the standout was a spontaneous pouring of a glass of Alexander Valley Meritage with the venison (the menu listed the paired wine as a Chilean cabernet/merlot blend). It's a rare treat to find Meritage by the glass, but the White Barn's wine list offers many ways to treat yourself: half-bottles of Amarone, St. Julien and St. Estephe, and more than 30 champagnes, including a Veuve Clicquot Vintage Reserve Brut 1996 that's available by the glass.

As you peruse the dessert menu, remember that you'll be presented, in addition, with a lovely plate of friandises. Imagine dark-chocolate truffles flavored with rosewater; sugar-dusted cassis gelees; tiny tastes of raspberry cheesecake; and (my favorite) diamonds of peanut butter fudge topped with chocolate ganache. Another word of advice: When you return to your room, next to the freshly turned-down sheets on your bed you'll find a plate of white-chocolate-dipped strawberries on the night table. Sweet dreams indeed.

ARROWS RESTAURANT

Berwick Road, Ogunquit, Maine
(207) 361-1100

Last year, it seemed the big news about Arrows was the anticipated publication of The Arrows Cookbook, accurately subtitled Cooking and Gardening from Maine's Most Beautiful Farmhouse Restaurant. Slated to be published in June by Scribner, it combines practical gardening advice with recipes from the restaurant.

Top: Dinner at Silks at Stonehedge Inn is a rare indulgence. Bottom: Stonehedge's "wine cave" houses some 60,000 bottles

Now, there's even bigger news, especially for Arrows devotees whose pilgrimages to this gastronomic garden of bliss were limited by the expense. Co-owners/co-chefs Mark Gaier and Clark Frasier have introduced a prix-fixe menu on Friday nights through late spring. At $38.95, the three-course dinners are about the same price as a typical Arrows main course, such as its grilled bluefin tuna with garden radicchio, artichokes and red French lentils; or tuna tartare with roasted bell pepper, garlic chives, lemon and shaved-fennel salad.

Billed as "trattoria night" or "bistro night," the Friday-night theme alternates "at the whim of the chef," according to Frasier, "either country French or country Italian. Each week we'll write a different menu of simple but robust, family-style food." Although the menu will focus on braised meats rather than foie gras, you can expect the Arrows' customary level of quality. You can also expect flexibility: While one diner orders the prix fixe, others at the same table can choose from the regular menu. You'll want to allow for flexibility in your wallet too, because once you're tempted by Arrows' house-cured prosciutto or its irresistible presentation of foie gras—with lemon-balm aspic, nasturtium salad and violet mustard, for example—you'll fold like a napkin.

Frasier hopes the new menu will entice local diners to develop a weekly habit. Another idea: After wrapping up an afternoon of outlet shopping in nearby Kittery, total the money you've saved on discounts, drive a little farther north and then spend it all on an early dinner!

Also new this year is master gardener Paige Higgins, who, Frasier says, brings new energy to Arrows' famous organic garden, which provides most of the restaurant's fresh produce. The gardening adventure continues this summer with an attempt to grow Belgian endive, which Frasier describes as a demanding vegetable. It has to be grown initially in the dark, then kept dormant in the cellar, then started up again. Good luck, guys.

SILKS AT STONEHEDGE INN

160 Pawtucket Boulevard, Tyngsboro, Mass.
(978) 649-4400

Timeless in appearance, this quietly elegant country inn, with its European-style hospitality and white-fenced green pastures grazed by retired thoroughbred horses, may seem unaffected by the vicissitudes of the local economy.

Not so. Just as the finest service staff responds nimbly to the subtlest indications of guests' needs, Stonehedge Inn is adapting to the realities of challenging times. Dawn Bozkurt, who, with her husband, Levent, owns and runs the inn and restaurant, says feedback from guests has resulted in changes to Silks' latest menu.

"We felt it important to do our part by readjusting our menu prices," Bozkurt says. "Overall, prices have decreased from our last menu."

Some guests, she adds, were intimidated by elaborate menu descriptions in French, so the French has been eliminated. It's a practical decision—not a political one—that streamlines the new menu. Dinner here is still an indulgence, though; pan-seared foie gras with spiced mango and Grand Marnier reduction is just a starting point.

Also indulgent is the on-site spa, extensively renovated and expanded last year. Consider it your opportunity for mix-and-match personal pleasure. How about Sunday brunch, followed by a blue-spruce soak with an herbal massage? Or a light lunch in the glassed-in café to fortify you before a eucalyptus and sea-salt scrub? On a bleak rainy day, consider a hot-rocks massage and afternoon tea (served daily, from 2:30 to 5pm) complete with scones, sandwiches and pastries. Not to mention the usual assortment of full-body massages, manicures, pedicures and facials, provided in skylit treatment rooms accented with European marble. If you're staying overnight at the inn, you'll enjoy full access to the spa's four-season pool, tennis court, sunbathing deck, sauna, steam room and more.

Stonehedge's other attractions include a wine cave custom-built into the side of a hill, currently home to 60,000 bottles of wine, and an herb garden designed by David Gilson of the Herb Lyceum in nearby Groton. From basic spearmint and lavender to unusual varieties like pineapple sage, licorice basil and anise hyssop, the herbs grown in the garden are used in Silks' kitchen. iB

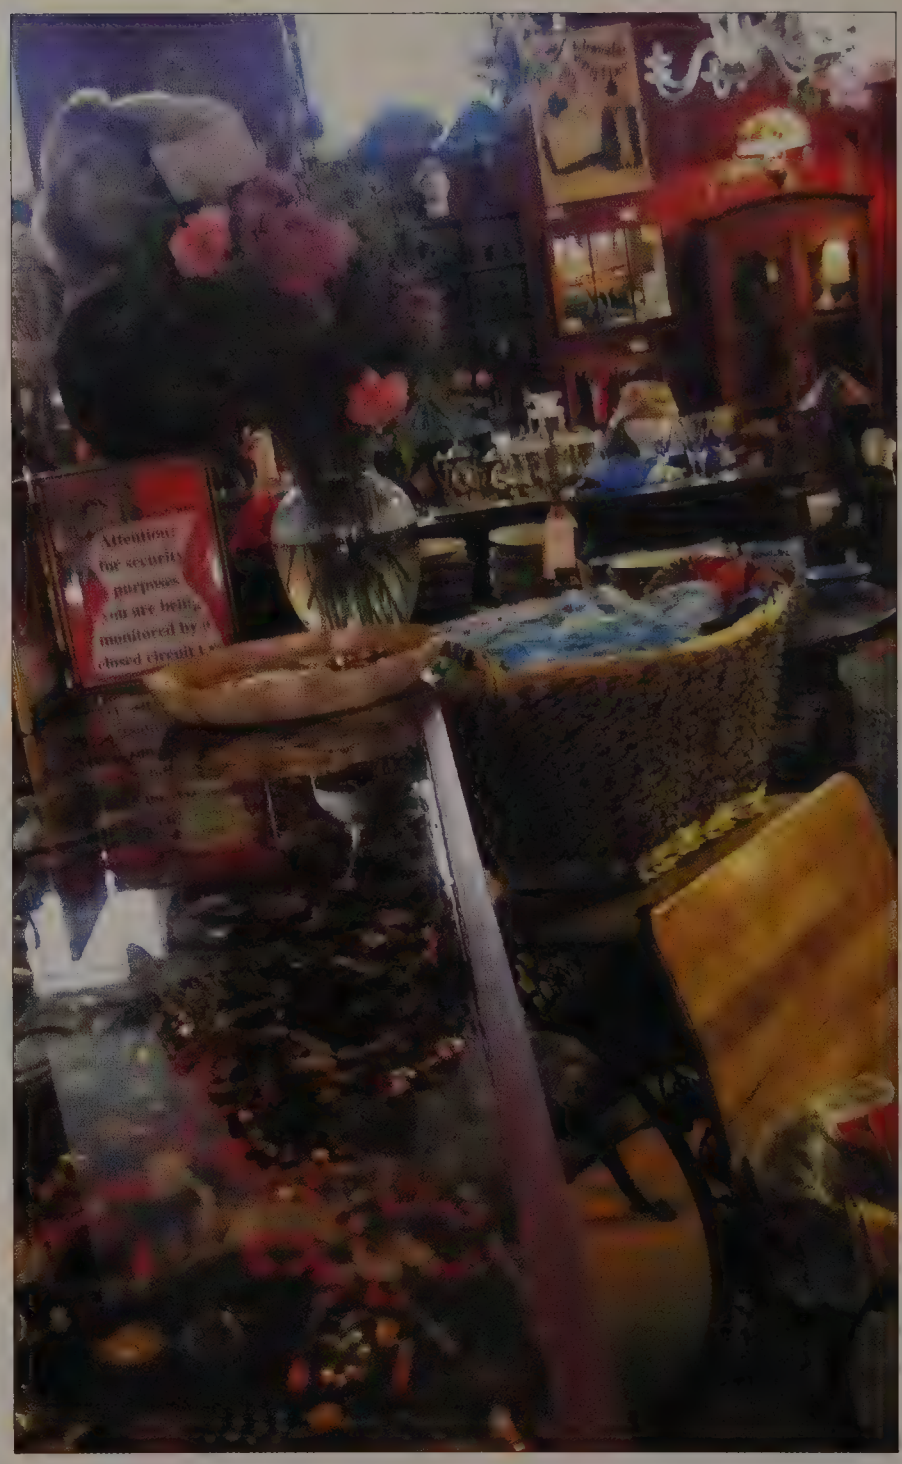
THE GIFT THAT QUACKS AND MOOS

Thinking of giving a gift? Heifer International donates animals or seedlings, around the world. You can give the whole animal or pay for a share, from yourself or in the name of a friend. Call 800-422-0755

Here's a gift that truly keeps on giving: Heifer International is a charitable organization that donates animals to rural people in need in 45 countries around the world. A farmer or family receives training and then takes in the sheep, goat, pig, cow, rabbit, chicken, llama, honeybees or, alternatively, seedlings. Once an animal has produced an heir, so to speak, the offspring is passed on to another family in need and the ball of fur keeps rolling. There's something wonderful about knowing that a donation becomes a tangible, productive—yea, reproductive—source of income, protein and fertilizer for a family. The pictures in the catalog of children hugging their adorable, fruitful baby animals will bring your heart and your checkbook closer to this charity. Hey, sentimentality works.



STILL FABULOUS, BUT NOW IN INMAN SQUARE

Absolutely Fabulous, selling vintage clothing, furniture, jewelry and more, has moved from the outskirts to the heart of Inman Square. 1309 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-864-0656).

Absolutely Fabulous has moved from its former funkland into Inman Square. Sister in spirit to nearby Buckaroo Mercantile, Ab/Fab has taken over the site of a former used bookstore, a space that complements the store felicitously. A suit of armor and a shiny, Valentine-red plastic chair greet you. Throughout, mood and groove preside, with antiques alongside frisky, campy items. Lots of classic, Tiffany-style lamps—including one in a sinuous, mysterious butterfly shape—shed somber light, while French posters produced on canvas through a process called "giclee" almost glow. A display case in what must be called the gentlemen's section recalls a more dapper, romantic age of silver cigarette cases, cigar holders, flasks and fedoras. Crocodile appears (albeit artificially) in the form of a purse, and a cowhide rug, which could be used as a blanket, exudes a real Western feel. Some dramatically large vases, in orange or green, would almost upstage flowers. Some "shabby chic" new white cabinets sit congenially beside AbFab oldies. A clever touch of cookery has bent vinyl records into curvy black bowls that still display Lawrence Welk's or Andy Gibb's name inside. Fabulous decorative touch, dahlink!

THE MAINE EVENT

Officer Friendly and Other Stories is Lewis Robinson's debut collection of short stories.

Lewis Robinson, originally from Natick, Mass., writes short stories about Maine. The same towns tend to recur, giving his stories a sense of community, sometimes friendly and sometimes intrusive. Those links let you see the many ways—sad, touching and ironic—that the adult characters are simultaneously living out the hangovers and hangups of their high school selves. There's a recurring theme of two boys-unto-men who are friends becoming painfully involved with the same woman. In the story "Puckheads," two competitive hockey-playing friends try their hand at drama and are cast in the musical Oliver, competing again for the attention of the contemptuously sexy and bewitching Christina. The romantic element highlights each man's agonies of identity. Throughout Officer Friendly and Other Stories, Robinson specializes in the tensions of characters who totter uncomfortably on the outer lip of belonging, or not.

Beyond Rustic

Chef Bill Bradley brings his formidable talents to the Rustic Kitchen table

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

About a year and a half ago, Todd English opened Todd English Rustic Kitchen in Quincy Market. The eponymous restaurant featured the Toddmeister's name on the marquee and its telephone listing, but eventually it came to be called Rustic Kitchen, without the name of its famous founder.

Recently English divested himself of Rustic Kitchen, and the new owners have brought in Bill Bradley—no, not the former New York Knick–U.S. Senator–presidential candidate, but the culinary virtuoso originally from upstate New York—as their chef de cuisine. Bradley came to notice among city foodies when he burst upon the North End dining scene at Bricco on Hanover Street, and more recently at Carmen on North Street. His arrival at Rustic Kitchen has brought the well-regarded restaurant to a new level. A working chef who does not merely spin concepts and create menus, Bradley practices his trade in a hands-on fashion.

A signature Bradley dish, the salt cod fritters ($11) arrived in a wooden box with a sliding top, the kind in which salt cod is customarily packaged. This creatively engaging offering contained deep fried rock shrimp, pristinely fresh leaves of romaine lettuce, light and lively tempura-fried green beans and a salsa verde that combined capers, extra virgin olive oil, parsley and mashed sardines. The cod fritters themselves, lightly breaded, deep-fried spheres the size of ping pong balls, were wonderfully moist and flavorful. A second appetizer, crispy fried calamari ($10), proved an exceptional rendition of this staple of Italian menus. The tiny, tender rings of baby squid, at once crisp, even crunchy, yet delicate and light, were extraordinarily tender. Thin slices of tiny red and green jalapeño peppers, toasted pine nuts, ringlets of green onions, chopped olives and sautéed greens transformed this standard offering into a Sicilian extravaganza.

Moving on to the pastas, Bradley's chestnut "caramels" ($17) transported us with their velvety texture and their contrasting but complementary flavors of salty, smoky pancetta, earthy mushrooms, mildly sweet chestnut purée, and creamy Taleggio cheese. Responsive to our request to share one order as a pasta course, the kitchen served these 10, oblong pasta pillows on two plates.

Bradley's palate-pleasing performance continued through the main courses. Slow roasted rack of pork ($18) brought two thick chops, rare and juicy—cooking pork until it is like shoe leather is finally a thing of the past in most good restaurants—accompanied by garlicky broccoli rabe, mashed potatoes garnished with crisp bacon, and a Marsala mushroom jus. The broccoli rabe, flavored with an intriguing combination of roast tomatoes, cinnamon and allspice, gave the dish a new and different dimension. "Risi Bisi" ($22) may have captured the highest honors among the array of high-quality offerings. Five giant sea scallops arrived surrounded by a pool of creamy, al dente sweet pea risotto that could well have stood on its own as the main attraction. This melding of lively fresh vegetables—green peas, tomatoes, artichokes, carrots and leeks—included another Sicilian enhancement in the form of slices of juicy tangerine. The satiny yet resilient texture of the scallops together with their wholesome, nutty flavor made them a standout.

Even desserts, often an afterthought at Italian restaurants, achieved distinction at Rustic Kitchen. The chocolate cake ($7), an exemplar of what other venues would call chocolate decadence, had about as much in common with what one usually thinks of as chocolate cake as a Homerian epic has with an Aesop fable. It consisted of a dense but moist flourless chocolate cake surrounded by powerfully flavored chocolate espresso zabaglione and topped with chocolate chip meringue, swirls of warm bittersweet chocolate sauce, a scoop of vanilla bean ice cream, whipped cream and a thick slab of dark chocolate. Less elaborate but equally remarkable and creative, the Italian bread pudding ($7) was moist and full-flavored, with a garnish of grappa-soaked cherries and a scoop of remarkably rich lemon ice cream.

The physical environment in which Bradley demonstrates his culinary virtuosity has remained pretty much the way it was before he arrived. It has a cluttered look, and a long narrow dining room that can expand through retractable front glass walls for alfresco dining. Heavy, ab sorbent cotton napkins and hefty steak knives contrast with the flimsy tableware and clunky wineglasses. Undersized tables for two frustrate waiters and diners when the oversized plates and platters compete for space with water glasses and the bread basket.

However, one does not come to Bradley's Rustic Kitchen for the décor or the table settings. One could come, however, for the bread alone, notwithstanding the Biblical admonition. Rustic Kitchen's breads, baked in a formidable and imposing fieldstone oven visible from the dining room, rival the best in the city, with spectacularly crisp and deftly seasoned breadsticks, thin, herb-encrusted stracci (wheat flatbread named for the Italian slang for rag or handkerchief) and moist cranberry focaccia. Though it needed no enhancement, the bread came with a Peruvian bean puree redolent of garlic and olive oil.

The dining room at Rustic Kitchen overlooks Faneuil Hall.

Basil Pecorino pasta with Wellfleet clams, spicy house-cured bacon and garlic

Rustic Kitchen's wine list, predominantly Italian and Californian, features some of the more customer friendly prices in Boston. The 2001 Zaccagnini Sangiovese ($26) from the Marche—Italy's province due east of Tuscany—was a fruity but robust red with a great bouquet and good acidity, a splendid accompaniment to food. Another, even lower-priced Italian red, the Calabrian Ciro Librandi ($21), was a definite cut above most house wines.

I was dismayed on recent midweek visits to Rustic Kitchen at the paucity of patrons, and I wondered if the withdrawal of celebrity chef English from the endeavor had adversely affected business. When a consumer product sheds a famous trademark, it is likely that business will suffer an immediate and pronounced hit. When the product is as good as the cuisine created by Bill Bradley, however, the hope is that it will both recover and achieve even higher and more universal recognition and patronage. Based upon my recent experiences at Rustic Kitchen, I am confident that as soon as the word gets around about the creatively delicious food Bradley is turning out at Rustic Kitchen, it will become the place to dine not only at Quincy Market but in the Financial District and adjoining neighborhoods as well. iB

Savor the Favor

More spring "green" for Community Servings

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Even during these times of economic stress and widespread uncertainty, a well-respected event benefiting a cause that's close to people's hearts can still elicit admirable generosity from local restaurateurs.

Case in point: Community Servings' 11th annual Lifesavor, the fund-raiser that draws close to a thousand people to a lavish cocktail reception at Le Meridien, then sends them off in trolleys to local restaurants for elegant, celebrity-hosted dinner parties. It's remarkable not only for its cost-effectiveness—this year, a mere $19,000 was spent to raise $430,000 to help provide home-delivered meals to people affected by HIV/AIDS—but also for the way it inspires chefs to bring their hospitality to new heights. In Copley Square, the White Star Tavern served a five-course dinner to Community Servings' clients. In Newton, at Ariadne, chef/owner Christos Tsardounis decided—at 4:30 in the afternoon—to add a couple more courses to the dinner he planned to serve at 8 o'clock. His wife and wine director, Kathleen Malloy, rolled her eyes, then rolled up her sleeves and went to work. Like every other restaurant, in the spirit of celebrating kindness, generosity and the good company of interesting dinner guests, they also provided a welcome as memorable as the seven-course menu. Congratulations to all!

SECOND COURSE

Although he hasn't yet closed on the deal, chef Scott Herritt is eager to get the word out about the new restaurant he plans to open after having spent seven years at the North End's Florentine Café. "I'm in the process of writing the menu right now," he says. Not surprisingly, Herritt describes the menu at the forthcoming Grotto, which will be tucked into a lower-level space on Beacon Hill, as "Italian-inspired cuisine, with a few of my favorites from the Florentine thrown in." Miserable weather and the miseries of the Big Dig have made for tough times in the old neighborhood, according to Herritt. "A lot of restaurants are for sale in the North End right now," he says. If all goes according to plan, expect an early June opening for the 47-seat Grotto.

Un-hasty pastry: What took Le Meridien so long to hire a new pastry chef after Christophe Heyt landed at the Four Seasons several months ago? Apparently, it's better to be slow and stellar than fast and flawed.

John Quinn takes over from Christophe Heyt as the new pastry chef at Le Meridien Hotel.

John Quinn, the new pastry chef at Le Meridien, comes to Boston from the five-star Jefferson Hotel in Richmond, Va., where he was executive pastry chef. If his name sounds familiar, that's because he's had experience in Boston, both at the Ritz-Carlton and the Four Seasons, and as assistant pastry chef at Café Vanille on Beacon Hill. Also at Julien, which recently received the AAA Four Diamond Award for the 13th consecutive year, Dan Kenney was promoted from executive sous chef to chef de cuisine.

Patio alerts: On Newbury Street, Armani Café has renovated and updated its furniture and relandscaped the outdoors; Piattini Wine Café has completed renovations on its terrace, which opened for the first time late last summer…Bomboa's patio now features an Asian-Latino fusion tapas menu, dubbed "Chino-Latino" by executive chef/co-owner Felino Samson, in addition to a selection of novelty martinis such as the Trixitini, which comes with its own Pixie Stix.

Newsflash: East Coast Grill in Cambridge now offers valet parking! And now that the weather is warming up, does the Grill's chef/owner Chris Schlesinger miss running the Back Eddy in Westport, which he sold last year? Not particularly: "The thing I like most about restaurants is starting them," he says.

Finally, happy first anniversary to Caffe Umbra! iB

WINE

Wine and Food Pairing 101

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

The moment of truth: You've ordered dinner, and now you're staring at the wine list. The longer you take, the greater the pressure to choose something good. So you take a deep breath, pick something and hope it works out. Sound familiar?

It's not the worst thing you can do to choose a wine you think you'll like based only on past experience and without even considering what everyone's eating. But if we're looking for that extra special effect, where the wine and food actually come together to make each other taste more delicious, clearly we need more information. We need to understand a little bit about the chemistry of what happens when we combine flavors.

That's exactly what we did at Boston University in a seminar entitled Wine and Food Pairing 101 that I recently hosted with chef Steve Zimei of the South End's Gallia restaurant. The design followed many tastings I've conducted in the past, but somehow the energy of the participants, the skills of the chef and the simplicity of the presentation combined to raise the experience to a new level. And though it would require some preparation, you could re-create our tasting seminar at home.

Here's how it went: Since most of the wine you're likely to encounter in restaurants is identified by grape variety (this leaves out classic European selections, but we're talking about 101 here rather than an intermediate-level class), I picked textbook examples of the nine most prevalent ones for us to taste and briefly discuss. Then the chef prepared halibut, grilled chicken and braised beef and put each on a separate plate with three radically different sauces. We went back and tasted three wines with the halibut and its three sauces, the chicken and its three, and so on with the beef. This gave us 27 different combinations of wine with food over the course of two hours.

Although no two people in the group of 70 agreed on everything, significant patterns did emerge. Our light, mild pinot grigio actually complemented all of the sauces served with the fish and, in fact, tasted better with two of them than it did on its own, paling only in combination with a strongly flavored piquant blood-orange sauce. A vibrantly acidic sauvignon blanc we served next proved an outstanding match with this same fruity acidic sauce, the citric elements in each reacting strongly together to bring out more nuance, depth and texture. It was one of the most successful matches, although the same wine tasted thin and sour with our other sauces: a delicate celery-apple sauce that it overwhelmed, and a subtle white wine cream sauce that made the wine taste sour. Our crisp unoaked chardonnay went especially well with the celery and apple combination.

The fourth wine, an oak-aged chardonnay (we actually served eight varieties, including the ubiquitous chardonnay twice in different incarnations) was surprisingly adaptable with grilled chicken in both a sweet and spicy mustard Sauternes sauce, and a creamy shiitake mushroom sauce. Its sunny ripeness matched the flavors of the first while its lush texture worked beautifully to complement the mushrooms. Our fruity, expansively savory pinot noir also was quite adaptable, echoing some of the shiitake flavors but tasting best with a buttery charred tomato sauce, the acidity in both bringing out latent subtleties of flavor. A syrah proved controversial; I thought it too strongly tannic for any of the sauces, although the consensus was that its somewhat aggressive red berry pepperiness complemented the mushrooms.

The most celebrated combination of all was a richly tannic cabernet sauvignon with the beef in a truffle sauce. In fact, this highly earthy, sharply flavored dish went extremely well with a tart-flavored savory Sangiovese as well as a mellow, fruit-driven merlot. On the other hand, a sweet and sour blueberry Gastrique robbed flavor from the cabernet and thinned out the Sangiovese, whereas it allowed the merlot to shine. The final sauce, a slightly salty, piquant black-olive and red-wine sauce, was also highly reactive: outstanding with the Sangiovese, echoing some of the wine's flavors, but combustible and unpleasantly bitter with the cabernet.

How to summarize? Acidity in wine and acidity in food work together for most people. So do earthy flavors in both. We're generally looking for a similarity in texture, preferring heavier, richer buttery sauces with wines that have some weight and fullness. If we can find some flavor echoes (apple and unoaked chardonnay, pinot noir and tomato), this is often appealing. And sweetness in food is tricky: It doesn't work too well with subtle, understated wines, or red wines with tannin. iB

Comedian Gallagher performs May 10.

THU./MAY 1–SAT./MAY 10

Performing Arts: Laugh Track

More than 150 comedians will converge upon our fair city for the Boston Comedy and Movie Festival May 1–10, which must make us—at least temporarily—America's funniest city. (Somebody check the Guinness Book of World Records!) George Carlin kicks off the festivities at the Lowell Memorial Auditorium May 2. Throughout the following week, comedians from around the world will perform at venues across Greater Boston, including the Milky Way, Dick's Beantown Comedy Vault, Nick's Comedy Stop, the Comedy Connection and the Improv Asylum, plus funny movies and television shows will be shown at the Coolidge Corner Theatre and the Hatch Shell. Jonathan Katz and Tom Snyder host An Evening With the Creators of Dr. Katz, Professional Therapist May 8, and the festival closes with a performance by Gallagher (left), the comedian who made the "Sledge-o-Matic" famous, May 10. Bring your raincoats, goggles and umbrellas and prepare to be "Gallagherized." See Comedy on page 56 for more information. www.bostoncomedyfestival.com

CityScope: Boozing with the Best

We offer a salute to our favorite drinkslingers—nominated by you, our enthusiastic readers—during the IMPROPER BOSTONIAN'S Beloved Bartenders Party, hosted by Jonathan Soroff at the Rack. This is your chance to toast that guy or gal who knows just how you like your martini (stirred, not shaken), what beer to pour before you even sit down, or that you like an ice cube in your chardonnay. These folks will come out from behind the bar for once and carouse with the hoi polloi. But be warned: Boston's Beloved Bartenders know how to let loose. Be prepared to party into the wee hours. You can cheer on your favorites during the Bartenders Competition, where bartenders are judged for their drink-making speed, agility and overall "flair." Afterward, dance to the tunes of Sugarfoot and the Brass Kickin' Horns. The Rack, 24 Clinton St., Boston (617-725-1051). 6pm.

THU./MAY 1–SUN./MAY 11

Performing Arts: Trouble in River City

We hate to boast, but one of the Calendar girls (who shall remain nameless) was the star of the junior high musical, The Music Man. All was going swimmingly during rehearsals until she realized that Marian the Librarian actually had to kiss con man Harold Hill. Whoa! Her first kiss (ever!) was going to be with seventh-grader Kitt Martin? Long story short, the passionate kiss became a peck on the cheek and her reputation as a prude was cemented. Forever haunted by this episode, we're not likely to be in the audience of this new production, which features choreography by five-time Tony Award winner Susan Stroman (of Contact fame), but we wholeheartedly recommend you head to the Colonial Theatre to catch this lively tale about a con man who comes to a Midwestern town with a scam involving a boys' marching band. Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). May 1, 7pm; Mon.-Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30pm. $23-$70.

Indie film Melvin Goes to Dinner shows May 2 and 4

Movies: Independent Spirit

Let's face it, lots of independent films leave even the most devout cinemaniac shaking his or her head, saying "Nope. Didn't get it." But the producers of Boston's inaugural Independent Film Festival—which has all of the fixings of a bona fide event, with four days of films, panel discussions, seminars, Q&A sessions with filmmakers, celebrity events, awards and parties—promise that these films stack up. Unlike some indie film fests, the BIFF targets a mainstream audience rather than niche audiences. The fest is held at various venues around the city, and more than 50 films are scheduled. Thu., 7-9pm (opening night film at the Somerville Theatre); Fri., 12pm-2am and Sat. and Sun., 11:30-2am. www.iffboston.org.

SUN./MAY 4–THU./MAY 22

Music: Get Ready to Rumble

Everyone knows that the music industry is cut-throat competitive, but if you haven't been to the annual WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble, you ain't seen nothing yet. This year the rumble, held at the Middle East, pits 24 local bands against each other for a chance to win a spot at the upcoming WBCN River Rave, $3,000, recording time at a studio and other prizes. And they give it all they've got. It starts out with sudden death preliminary rounds May 4–6, when bands get only a half-hour to show their stuff. After the official day of rest on May 7, bands continue to duke it out May 8–10. Some of the acts that will go head-to-head are Godboxer, Roctopus, Reverse, Baby Strange, Blake Hazard and Favorite Atomic Hero. Industry bigwigs judge the contest and pick one winner from each night to advance to the semifinals, which take place May 16 and 17. The finals, which end in the crowning of the rumble winner, are May 22. Preliminaries, $9; semifinals, $10. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-864-3278).

Performing Arts: From Caveman to Cavedad

After 12 years and almost 3,000 shows, Rob Becker, star of Defending the Caveman, the longest-running solo play in Broadway history, is ready for a breather. He'll retire briefly after his current 30-city tour to hang out with his wife and three children and write a new show tentatively called Cavedad. This month Bostonians have their last chance to see Becker perform his hysterically insightful show on the gaping hole called the gender gap. We caught up with Becker recently and asked whether dating, and relationships in general, have changed since he first started performing: "Yeah, this idea that men and women were different was a lot more controversial when I was starting," Becker says. "In the beginning, none of those [self-help] books had come out yet, and people were like, 'You don't have a Ph.D.' There were some places where the concept of men and women being different was more challenging. In big cities, that whole idea was less accepted. Of course, in the South, they've always thought that!" As for his new, as yet unwritten show, he says, "It'll be about how we parent differently, and how boys and girls turn out differently." We can't wait. Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4008). Wed.-Fri., 8pm; Sat., 5, 7:45 and 10:30pm; Sun., 2pm. $23-$52.50.

CityScope: Light Up

Smoking scenes like this one are soon to be snuffed out in Boston.

As you probably know, beginning May 5, Bostonians can no longer light up in indoor public spaces. If you're one of the sad lot who has to stop puffing in public, you have three chances to bid your social-smoking habit adieu. On May 1, the Oak Bar is throwing a Big Smoke party, offering guests six CAO cigars, two cocktails, a buffet dinner and live entertainment. Also on May 1, The Place is smokin' one last time with an IMPROPER sponsored Roaring Twenties–style party (think gangsters and flappers). And we can only imagine the haze that will cover Les Zygomates May 4. It Smoking Ban Party lets you commiserate over the imminent ban with fellow smokers while feasting on such appropriate specialties as smoked chevre salad, smoked salmon, smoked Antipasto plate, cherry-smoked pork chop and blow-torched crème brûlée. Guests receive complimentary cigarettes, rolling papers and tobacco. Oak Bar, Fairmont Copley Plaza, 138 St. James Ave., Boston (617-267-5300), 6pm, $125. The Place, 2 Broad St., Boston (617-523-2081), 8pm, $10. Les Zygomates, 129 South St., Boston (617-542-5108), no cover.

Books and Poetry: It's Their Party

Those of you who have been to the South End's Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center have already discovered its wealth of unusual, artsy offerings. The venue hosts everything from Burlesque revival shows, vaudeville acts and salsa dancing to rock concerts, African dance and performance art shows. If you haven't visited the center yet, here's a good opportunity: Sixoneseven, an event whose promoters gleefully admit is really a party masquerading as a fund-raiser. It brings in artists from a number of creative communities for an evening of mingling and partying, all to raise money to fund a film by local filmmaker Shandi Garrison. Architect Beth Whittaker and photographer Chris Gaines show their work, writer Karl Iagnemma reads from his new novel, On the Nature of Human Interaction, and Garrison shows one of his short films. The emcee for the evening is local author Steve Almond, and DJ Brynmore (who is also a photographer and filmmaker) supplies the tunes. 8pm-1am. 85 West Newton St., Boston (617-927-0061). $10 in advance; $15 at the door. Cash bar. Silent auction. www.sixoneseven.org.

CityScope: King for a Night

When we noticed that all of our friends were out scouring the city for blue suede shoes, we didn't give it a second thought (our friends are always out shoe shopping). But when those same friends began cancelling plans with us to stay home practicing their sexiest sneers and getting their hips into swiveling mode, we knew it could only mean one thing: an Elvis party. The event, it turns out, is a fund-raiser for the locally produced film The Faithful, and it brings in one of the world's top Elvis impersonators, Robert Washington, who gets so worked up during his act that he does flips and somersaults off the stage. During the show, you get to sample the King's favorite foods (including his inexplicable fave, the fried peanut butter and banana sandwich). The night of all things Elvis also includes a raffle, an auction of Elvis memorabilia and a King's Karaoke Contest, where contestants who belt out Elvis songs can win prizes including a cameo in The Faithful. 7:30pm, dinner and performance; 9pm, karaoke. Greek American Club, 288 Green St., Cambridge (617-320-3219). www.fishinhand.com. $10 (just karaoke) or $30-$45 (dinner, performance and karaoke). Cash bar.

VARIOUS DATES IN MAY

Tastings: Eat This!

It's a good thing that Arden B has declared that belts are out and sashes are in because we'll all need a bit of growing room after this month's plethora of foodie events. The fun begins May 1 with Taste of the Nation. Only a building as big as the Hynes Convention Center could house the more than 70 chefs who'll be cooking to benefit the anti-hunger program Share Our Strength. Then there's Taste of the North End at the New England Aquarium May 2. There's nothing better than nibbling on maguro sushi and shrimp cocktail as the sharks look on enviously. On May 7, there's Taste of the Towns—specifically Belmont and Watertown—which features samples from nearly two dozen restaurants. Finally, on May 8, there's the IMPROPER-sponsored StarChefs Rising Stars Revue at the Hotel Marlowe. This walk-around tasting features dishes from Ana Sortun of Oleana, Thomas John of Mantra, Mark Allen of Le Soir, Dante deMagistris of Blu, and Tom Berry of Bambara, among others. Get ready to chow! See Tastings on page 44 for more information.

Julia Child: An Opera

Cambridge Opera sets The French Chef to music

Mezzo-soprano Laurie Lemley stars as Julia Child in Cambridge Opera's production of Bon Appetit!

In episodes of The French Chef, Julia Child blustered her way through the kitchen and always turned out gorgeous, mouthwatering concoctions. Television viewers tuned in to learn how to make souffle, but the lesson always included a little kitchen drama.

American composer Lee Hoiby picked up on that drama when he set out to write a one-act opera based on an episode of the popular cooking show. Bon Appetit! premiered at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., in 1989, and later played to sold-out houses off Broadway. This month, Cambridge Opera presents Bon Appetit! as a tribute to Child, a former Cambridge resident. "This is the rich buttery brown batter for le gateau au chocolat l'eminence brune," begins the chamber opera, which takes its lines almost verbatim from one of Child's shows. "Hoiby picked an episode that was really typical of Julia and all the things we love about her," says Susan Cooke, who sings songs about food and cuisine with other members of Cambridge Opera after the 20-minute performance.

Laurie Lemley stars as Julia Child, and instead of miming the cooking segment, as actress Jean Stapleton did in the original production, Lemley literally gets her hands dirty. "Lemley's been practicing in her kitchen, breaking eggs, measuring a cup and a quarter of corn starch while she sings," says Cooke. She's also been watching old episodes to study Child's movements and the tone of her voice. And you know that when Lemley bangs a pan on the counter and chocolate gets in her eye, she's going to recover—just as Child did nearly every episode for almost 40 years on television.

For those who feel a bit hungry after the opera, local chefs like Jack Fulton of Casablanca, Lynette Mosher of Emerson Inn by the Sea, and Oxford Spa's Heather Dill and Elizabeth Hogan will be on hand to serve up delicacies after the show. Bon appetit!
Cambridge Opera, 106 Harvey St., Cambridge (617-547-7819). www.cambridgeopera.org. May 2-3, 8pm. $25.—Julie Short

June Bride
Leventhal-Sidman Jewish Community Center, 33 Nahanton St., Newton (617-558-6522). May 3, 8pm; May 4, 2pm. $26. Sara Felder takes audiences from an awkward first date to the culmination of the wedding ceremony in this tale of reluctant parents, blissful brides and the ageless spirit of the Jewish tradition in this one-woman show.

THE SCHEME TEAM

Confidence scams its way to a good time

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Edward Burns' character starts out Confidence flat on his back and soaked in blood, narrating his story like William Holden's famously floating corpse in Sunset Boulevard. "So I'm dead," he begins. But if you really think he's dead, you aren't watching closely. The bastard child of the twisted pulp novels of Jim Thompson and the colorful crime movies of David Mamet, Confidence is all about scams. In no way is it in the same league as The Grifters (the best movie made from a Thompson book), Mamet's con-filled House of Games or Elmore Leonard adaptations like Out of Sight or Get Shorty, but it fires up enough sordid sparks to earn its place in a crook-cinema line-up.

The dead regularly rise in Confidence, the tale of a team of Los Angeles con men whose specialty is scamming small men out of large sums of money. As the crew's second in command, Paul Giamatti plays another character who comes back from the dead, after a scam in which the team scares an accountant into abandoning a briefcase containing $150,000 by convincing him that an accessory-to-murder charge might be in his future.

Edward Burns plays a grifter who enlists a pickpocket (Rachel Weisz) to help pull off a con.

But what the crew didn't realize is that their victim was an accountant for a local crime kingpin—a scuzzy, messy, horny club owner played by Dustin Hoffman with lip-smacking glee. After the kingpin has one of the team knocked off, Burns sets up a meeting with him and the crew's penance is made clear. They have to pull a scam on a victim of the kingpin's choosing, and he's got one picked out, the banker Morgan Price (Robert Forster), who's been able to couch his dirty dealings in legitimate business in ways Hoffman's character never has.

The con men concoct a scheme to get a phony corporate loan from Price's bank. They find their mark in a drab VP (John Carroll Lynch) and enlist Rachel Weisz, a pickpocket well versed in using her curves to pull swerves on men, for the job. With the pickpocket as the lure, the crew poses as a start-up company that's failed with other banks but has a "secret" surefire way to pay back the loan (info they tell the VP on the q.t.). They get the VP to push through the loan and wire funds to an offshore account. It's money the crew will simply never repay.

Of course, it's not that simple. Also looking out for number one are two crooked cops (Luis Guzman, Donal Logue), an eccentric customs agent (Andy Garcia) and one of the banker's security men (Morris Chestnut). Confidence has plenty of twists and swerves of its own, but thankfully, those aren't the only things it has to offer. There's juicy fun in Burns' smart, sardonic performance (though it's distracting that, in short hair, he looks so much like Ben Affleck). Burns' scenes with Hoffman bristle with amusing dialogue and venomous undercurrent, with Burns' casual style and Hoffman's hyper character a potent contrast. Meanwhile, Weisz drips with bad-girl insolence without drifting into femme fatale cliche, and Guzman, Logue and especially Giamatti add spicy detail the way that only the best character actors can.

Director James Foley—who has both a Thompson adaptation (After Dark, My Sweet) and a Mamet adaptation (Glengarry Glen Ross) in his past—keeps Confidence lean and fast-moving. Doug Jung's script sometimes makes odd choices, like having Burns narrate to the camera at times while he's also telling Chestnut's character about the events we see in flashback. But Confidence never gets too slick or smug, which is more than you can say for many crime movies. And when the plot twists come—some convincing, some not—Confidence isn't fully dependent on them to succeed. Fortunately, it has other aces up its sleeve. iB

Anger Management ★★
I doubt that Jack Nicholson and Queen Latifah hav ever competed for the same role. But this Nicholson Adam Sandler comedy is cut from the same limp high-concept formula as Bringing Down the House. It got the same sort of hapless hero, the same sort of an noying intruder to his life and the same pre-fab happ ending. This time, Sandler is the guy who gets put o the right path by the unorthodox outsider. He's a gu who needs assertiveness training but who, due to sev eral mix-ups, ends up sentenced to the anger manage ment seminars Nicholson's character runs. About th only sparks here are the outbursts by John Turturro who plays the most angry member of the Nicholson run support group. You'll feel like him if you pay to se this. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between two cul tures—think Double Happiness, Mississippi Masala an My Big Fat Greek Wedding—gets trotted out yet agai in director Gurinder Chadha's latest, which can't com pare to her Bhaji on the Beach but is still involving. Par minder Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, th Indian-English teen with soccer skill and two Sikh par ents who won't allow her to pursue such a nontradi tional female endeavor. When she's recruited to pla for a local women's team, with the possibility of disco very by an American pro team, the scene is set for lots o running around behind her parents' back and comi mishaps—in fact, an awful lot of repetitive runnin around and mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, bu Nagra, Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) an Keira Knightley (as her teammate and sometim rival), as well as Chadra's sense of compassion, help dig nity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Boston Com mon, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Better Luck Tomorrow ★★★
Writer-director Justin Lin takes the Asian-America movie beyond the immigrant experience in this free wheeling story of high school honor students wh start dabbling in crime. The title is apparently a nod t John Woo's A Better Tomorrow, and this too is the stor of friends whose relationships get ripped apart b their life of crime. Quick, funny, violent, and smar the movie marinates its irreverent take on high schoo life in the stew of hormones and power that drives it teen characters. We've not heard the last from Lin. (A Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Bulletproof Monk ★½
Chow Yun-Fat deserves better than this cartoonish ac tion drama in which he's a butt-kicking Tibetan mon protecting a sacred scroll, who finds his unlikely, an unconvincing, successor in the pickpocket played b Seann William Scott. The audience deserves bette too. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a late Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of th lusty, laugh-filled spoof of the Roaring Twenties, i which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (an murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murde esses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Rene Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was great career move, Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer tr ing to keep her name alive while in jail, and a surprising amusing Richard Gere is the upscale shyster with all th answers. All three know just how to manipulate truth justice and the American way through performance. (A Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Core ★★
This oafish save-the-world movie might have yo checking the calendar. It feels exactly like a mediocr summer movie. Although the cast, including Aaro Eckhart, Hilary Swank and Delroy Lindo, is more in teresting than those in most sci-fi action movies, aft a while even their charms can't carry this generic sto of averted scientific doom. And there's a lot of "while here, as the movie drags on for over two hours. (A Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Dreamcatcher ★★
There are familiar elements in the latest Stephen Kin adaptation: childhood friends, beasts, snow, pine tre and Maine (though this was filmed in Canada). Bu the combination is awfully tedious this time aroun The friends (Thomas Jane, Jason Lee, Timoth Olyphant and Damian Lewis) are grown now, bu their thoughts often trigger flashbacks to when th were boys, and when the retarded boy (Andrew Rob they befriended gave them telepathic powers. It seem the boy gave the others the powers because he kne they would need them to save the world during a alien invasion. If that sounds far-fetched, it comes of lot better than the clunky dialogue between Morg Freeman and Tom Sizemore, who play the milita men trying to contain the aliens. This one plods alon

The Good Thief ★★★
You didn't need last year's infamous mug shot to know that Nick Nolte had tumbled off the wagon. You just had to check out this movie, which like the Nolte films of the late 1980s, gauges his lack of sobriety by the unintelligibility of his words. He hasn't made you say "Huh?" this much since Teachers. But at least it fits the role. Neil Jordan's remake of the 1955 French film Bob Le Flambeur—one of the coolest movies ever made—casts Nolte as the down-and-out crook who goes cold turkey in order to pull one last score while dodging an eager cop (Tcheky Karyo) and flirting with a sweet young thing (Nutsa Kukhiani) he's rescued from the streets. It's hardly a one-of-a-kind movie like the original, but it's sleek, fast-moving and always entertaining. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Head of State ★★
Chris Rock, outspoken comic, makes conventional political comedy. So conventional and mild-mannered that even to call it political is to be generous. You'd think for his directorial debut (which he also cowrote) that Rock would come up with something more special and passionate. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Identity ★★
The strong cast including John Cusack, Ray Liotta, Amanda Peet and John Hawkes helps, but the plot in this thriller by writer-director James Mangold becomes more and more arbitrary as it progresses. That means that the twists in this tale of a bunch of travelers stranded at a Nevada motel, who start dying one by one, keep having less and less impact, right down to the obligatory, empty twist ending. It's good to see the who-dies-next plot done with adults instead of teens for a change, but the suspense bleeds out of this like the air seeping from a slow leak in a balloon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Malibu's Most Wanted ★★½
Everybody's strapped to a nine iron in the hometown of B-Rad, Jamie Kennedy's amusing white rapper-wannabe. But when his Malibu dad (Ryan O'Neal) runs for governor of California, B-Rad (Bradley is his "slave name," he protests) is deemed too much of an embarrassment. So dad's campaign staff hires two black actors (Anthony Anderson and Taye Diggs) to pose as gangstas, kidnap B-Rad, take him to the hood and "scare the black out of him." The laughs are spotty at times, but they're more plentiful and more clever than anything in Bringing Down the House, that other recent race-relations comedy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Owning Mahowny ★★★
Director Richard Kwietniowski, who previously made Love and Death on Long Island (about a stuffy author's sudden infatuation with a heartthrob actor), takes us on another intriguing journey through the obsession raging within one man's mind. This time, it's a fastidious assistant bank manager (Philip Seymour Hoffman) with a gambling jones. He starts embezzling money from the bank so he can gamble to pay off his debts—and then, because he loses more, he embezzles some more, and so on. His quiet desperation has a fascinating car crash quality, all the more fascinating because the movie is based on a true story. (At Copley Place.)

Phone Booth ★★★
In this oddball thriller, Colin Farrell plays a slick publicist who is made to stay in a phone booth by a sniper who's appalled by the slick flack's lying and opportunism. Sounds reasonable to me. The story works because of its distinctively confined setting (one block of Manhattan), because Farrell gives his meatiest performance since Tigerland and because the movie gets the job done in 80 minutes, then rolls the credits. Tense and terse. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Shape of Things ★★
Neil LaBute's latest raises interesting questions about the compromises that go into a romantic relationship, but he gives his play a clumsy transition to the screen. The mannered performances, unnatural dialogue and casting of actors in their early 30s to play college students all make it hard to get involved in his story of the relationship between an art student (Rachel Weisz) who works hard to make her nebbish boyfriend (Paul Rudd) physically and emotionally "better," and of the effect that relationship has on two of his friends (Gretchen Mol, Frederick Weller). LaBute doesn't treat his characters with the same contempt he sometimes has, but they still feel like abstractions rather than anything the least bit real. (At Copley Place.)

Stevie ★★★
If Steve (Hoop Dreams) James' latest documentary weren't so well made, it could have come off like an episode of Jerry Springer. Nothing against Jerry, but James gets a more intimate, complex look at family feuding here. The movie is about James' attempt to reconnect with the title "character," the once-troubled child to whom he was a Big Brother. James finds Stevie now in his 20s, and as troubled as ever, living with his stepgrandmom and down the street from the mother he blames for all his problems. James' attempt to be a positive influence to Stevie doesn't last very long, though, once Stevie is charged with sexually abusing a child. Then the movie becomes a fascinating and heartbreaking study about trying to salvage the good in someone capable of being so bad. (At Kendall Square.)

BEYOND THE PALE

Hardcore graduates AFI broaden their musical spectrum to sing the sorrow

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

AFI singer Davey Havok and drummer Adam Carson didn't fit in at their high school in the Northern California town of Ukiah. So with their punk band, they got even with classmates through songs like "High School Football Hero" and "I Wanna Get a Mohawk (But Mom Won't Let Me Get One)."

"We grew up in a very small town where people weren't extremely open-minded," Carson says. "When every single day, you're looked down on simply because you like things other people don't like, that sort of frustration and defiance grows. And that's the same, I think, for all teenagers."

Twelve years and six albums later, AFI—short for A Fire Inside—is stretching a new set of perceptions with its ambitious major-label debut Sing the Sorrow. Goth-punk is the tag usually given to AFI, though the new CD—honed by a production dream team of Butch Vig (Nirvana) and Jerry Finn (Green Day)—also blends metal, pop and industrial music into its moody, melodic dynamics.

"We draw influences from a ton of different musical styles, and to distill the entire band down to punk and goth doesn't seem appropriate," Carson says from Minneapolis, on the road to AFI dates at Avalon May 9 and the WBCN River Rave at the Tweeter Center May 25. "I won't say that our roots aren't punk rock, or that we aren't influenced by early '80s dark English rock, 'cause we are very much so. But when you put those two words together, all I can think of is a mall punk, or Avril Lavigne wearing fishnets. It takes the seriousness out of it, and we do take the band very seriously."

Tattooed frontman Havok reinforces the goth image with his long black hair, mascara and nail polish, which recall the Cure or Marilyn Manson more than the Bay Area punk scene where AFI recorded with Offspring leader Dexter Holland's Nitro label. The band, rounded out by guitarist Jade Puget and singularly named bassist Hunter, distances itself from the goth associations by frequently performing in all-white outfits.

"Davey hasn't always looked the way he looks today, yet he's always looked a lot different than everybody else," says Carson, 28. "There's a sense of individualism that's just inherent within him. That's who he is. I have a graduation photo of he and I in our caps and gowns, and he has purple hair and piercings in his face. And that was in '93."

Havok has since struck a chord with crowds who shout along to his dark, oblique lyrics (the AFI fan club is called the Despair Faction). "Davey is singing about this disappointment and despondency, but with a glimmer of light," Carson says. "Being sad and depressed and despondent is a very real emotion, and it's a more common emotion than being happy."

"I've known him for 15 years, so in a way we're very like-minded, and he writes things that I've felt and couldn't always articulate," the drummer adds. "But he likes to keep the direct meanings of the songs guarded a little bit, and people can have different takes on it."

On Sing the Sorrow, AFI also finds a complement to Havok's arcing vocals with a broader sonic palette. In addition to fierce riffing, Puget dips into some ambient passages, even using keyboards on CD for the first time.

"In the last couple years, Jade and Davey have really gotten into electronic music, and Jade has been writing music on his laptop," Carson says. "It was a matter of going into the studio and seeing what was appropriate. For the industrial breakdown part of "Death of Seasons," we did a demo of the song, then he [Jade] did a remix on his computer, just for fun. But we all really liked the way it sounded. It gave the song a new dimension."

Live, Carson is now triggering some samples from his drum kit, but Puget is sticking to guitar. "When we do the tour with the three female backup singers, we'll probably bring a keyboard," the drummer jokes. "We don't want to turn into an electronic band where we're playing laptops. We're a rock band."

In any case, AFI is not worried about alienating older fans. "Our fan base is really comfortable with the fact that we evolve drastically between records," Carson says. "We're always striving to do better, always learning more about each other, and learning more musically."

"It's like when you were a kid, and every day you check your height, and you're the same," he says. "But when you see the notch on the wall where you were a year ago, you see that you've actually grown a lot. For us, it's a slow, consistent progression." iB

Morgan Page says farewell to Boston

"Boston feels like a transient city by nature," says DJ/recording artist Morgan Page (right). "There are always so many students passing through, moving in and out." Unfortunately for fans of the local electronic music scene, Page is a part of the nomadic student population, and next month he decamps for warmer pastures in California. But during his years here, the Emerson College senior has created some major waves in the house music world.

His work as a recording artist, including his 2001 full-length debut album Drifting Into View and a recent remix of the album's first single, "All I Need," by esteemed house music producer Halo, has earned accolades around the world. After a North American tour last summer, Page began to devote more attention to DJ-ing. On May 11, he makes a farewell DJ appearance at the Phoenix Landing in Cambridge's Central Square.

Page has found an innovative, sophisticated sound that always seems to throb with a unique pulse, from laid-back, deep tech house to straight-ahead dance-floor corkers and even some downtempo grooves. His original productions frequently include live instrumentation, delicately combining thoughtful and distinct percussion with sensual bass lines, and his Phoenix Landing set will be a taste of things to come. "I'll be playing some of my new stuff," Page says, "but most of the records I'll play are funkier than what I produce—although my new tracks are headed more in that direction."

Although Page has put a Boston stamp on his music, even using the sound of the Red Line stop at Kendall Square in the outro of Drifting, he's ready to move on. He still plans to keep an eye on Boston from his new home on the West Coast, however. "There's a whole new wave of very talented producers and DJs coming up here," he says. "I really look forward to seeing what happens with the Boston scene."

Art as Therapy

At the ICA, Feeling Promotes Healing

You won't find many "Do not touch" signs or hushing guards at the Institute of Contemporary Art this summer. Its newest exhibition, Pulse: Art, Healing and Transformation encourages touching, playing or even manipulating artwork as a therapeutic experience.

"This exhibit has power beyond the visually striking," says curator Emily Moore of the 15 international artists in the show whose works—ranging from painting and photography to video and performance art—are intended to promote health and healing. Followers of the artist-as-shaman philosophy of German artist Joseph Beuys and the spectator-as-creator approach of Brazilian Lygia Clark, the artists focus on the process of creating art—as well as the experience of the viewer—as a cathartic experience. "These works have the potential to have a positive, real, life-changing effect on both the viewer and the artist," says Moore.

Walk along a pebbled path created by Chinese artist Cai Guo-Qiang, who drew inspiration from principles of acupuncture and reflexology. You can embrace minimalist art, literally, by poking your arms through styrofoam pellet–filled orifices in ovaloid sculptures made by Brazilian artist Ernesto Neto. Or you can participate in the creative process by embroidering a personal message onto Philippino artist David Medalla's project, A Stitch in Time.

Two of the more poignant exhibitions deal with disease. In her series Intra-Venus, photographer Hannah Wilke chronicles her battle with cancer and her own understanding of the relationship between art and healing. Gretchen Bender's documentary Still/Here explores the curative effects of the artistic process on those who have faced life-threatening disease.

"The artists look at the exhibit from a very hopeful point of view," says Moore. "They believe that the viewer, or groups of people, through personal interaction with a piece, might have a transformative experience." —Elizabeth Reh
